The legacy was not claimed by the daughter. She alleged that she did not hear of the legacy or of testator's death till nearly two years after he died; & it was admitted by the exors. that no notice was given to her by them:—Held: the legacy had become forfeited, & had lapsed.—POWELL v. RAWLE (1874), L. 2948. ——.]—Testator bequeathed all his property to his wife & children, & appointed his wife sole extrix. He left him surviving his wife & two infant children, viz. a son, long since deceased, & a daughter, who attained twenty-one in 1876. The widow married again, & during her daughter's infancy she, in her character of extrix., advanced all testator's estate to her second husband upon the security of a mtge. which proved insufficient. She survived her second husband, & died in 1885, having left all property away from her daughter. The daughter, as sole surviving beneficiary under her father's will, claimed the whole of her mother's estate, upon the ground that it represented moneys retained by her mother under an order of the ct. in part satisfaction of the mtge., & in 1903 she commenced an action against her mother's exors. for an account on this footing:—Held: the mother was not an express trustee of these moneys for pltf., this was an action to recover a legacy within Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (c. 57), s. 8, & the claim was statute-barred.

Testator died Dec. 15, 1742, & the son's creditors filed their bill Apr. 13, 1743, praying to be paid their respective demands. Pltfs. by bringing their bill within four calendar months, & thereby declaring their acceptance of the legacies towards satisfaction of their debts, & offering to release, have performed the condition annexed according to the true intent of the will.

(2) The rule is that where a condition precedent annexed to a legacy becomes impossible by the act of God the legatee takes nothing. 2959. —— Condition relating to residence.]—Testator after giving a life estate therein to his wife devised certain real estate to trustees upon trust after his wife's death to allow his grandson to receive the rents & profits thereof during his life upon condition that he should reside for two calendar months in each year at the mansion house on the estate, & in case his grandson did not comply with that condition, then the rents, etc., should go over as if he were actually dead, & after the grandson's decease testator directed his trustees to hold the estate upon trust for his grandson's first & other sons successively in tail general, & he declared it to be his will that in case his grandson or any other person who should become entitled to the estate under the limitations of the will, should not reside at the mansion house during two calendar months in each year, the estate of every person by whom such default should be made should become void as if he were actually dead. The grandson died in the widow's lifetime. Held: the condition requiring residence was not binding on or applicable to the grandson's eldest son, who was now tenant in tail in possession; & leave was given to him to let the mansion house during his minority.—PARRY v. ROBERTS (1871), 25 L. At the date of the will the nephew was an infant, & eighteen months afterwards, when testatrix died, was nine years of age. He had been baptised in the Roman Catholic Church, & brought up by his father in the Roman Catholic faith. A year had elapsed since the death of testatrix:—Held: the infant nephew had not become incapacitated from taking the benefit of the legacy by being baptised in the Roman Catholic Church, as the intention of testatrix was that the legatee should have the opportunity of making his choice of a religion; & in the eye of the ct. he could not determine what his religion should be until he reached years of discretion, & during the time until he reached the age of twenty-one he could not be in the sense meant in the will either a Roman Catholic or not a Roman Catholic.—Re MAY, EGGAR v. MAY, [1917] 2 Ch. 126; 86 L. The nephew in testator's lifetime, & with his assent, married another person than the niece. Testator died leaving the nephew, the nephew's wife & a son of the nephew, & also leaving the niece, who was still unmarried, him surviving:—Held: (1) the condition being precedent, could not be removed by the assent; (2) it applied to the whole interest in the share & not only to the nephew's life interest.—DAVIS v. ANGEL (1862), 4 De G. 2967. —— Condition not to dispute will—Of beneficiary's father—Testator joining with beneficiary in proceedings to refer bequests to valuer.]—Testator bequeathed to his sister E. an annuity, with a clause of revocation in case she should do any act or take any proceedings to alter, frustrate or dispute the devises & bequests in the will of their deceased father. E., in pursuance of a power in the father's will, did take proceedings for altering the devises & bequests therein, & testator afterwards joined in an agreement, which was expressed to be, for the purpose of preventing & determining all doubts & controversies, to refer such devises & bequests to a valuer. The valuer awarded a sum of money to E. for equality of partition, & all the parties interested under the father's will, including testator, executed a deed of mutual confirmation & discharge, which recited that they were respectively satisfied with the valuation, & was expressed to be made in order to carry into effect what they believed to be the wishes of the father. Testator paid off one debt; he became lunatic; his committee paid off the other debt:—Held: J. was entitled to the money received on the policy, less the debt paid by the committee.—Re LARKING, LARKING v. LARKING (1887), 37 Ch. 2970. —— Condition to transfer property on declared trusts—Testator consenting to transfer on other trusts.]—Testator, who died in 1918, by his will made in 1911 gave his residuary estate upon trust for his son & five daughters equally, & settled the share of each daughter upon usual trusts for her & her issue, the daughter taking a life interest restrained from anticipation & no life interest or power of appointment being given to a husband with a gift over in default of issue to the son & the other daughters; & testator declared that the bequest to each daughter was upon the condition that she within three months after his death settled her interest under her mother's marriage settlement upon similar trusts, & that upon her failing to do so her share in his residuary estate should "therefrom cease" & go over to the son & other daughters. Three of the daughters had married with testator's concurrence before the date of his will, & each of them on her marriage had settled her interest under her mother's marriage settlement upon trust for herself & her husband respectively for life, she being restrained from anticipation, with power for them jointly or for the survivor to appoint to their issue, & in default of appointment upon usual trusts for their children with a gift over in default of issue for her statutory next of kin. Testator was a party to two of these settlements. On the question whether the married daughters were bound by the condition:—Held: the condition was a condition subsequent, & the married daughters, having on their marriage in testator's lifetime with his concurrence settled their interests under their mother's marriage settlement, were exempt from the performance of the condition; but the ct. removed the restraint on their life interests under their marriage settlements so that they might, if so advised, assign to trustees any interest they had at testator's death in their mother's marriage settlement.—Re GROVE, PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. DIXON, [1919] 1 Ch. 249; 88 L. 2971. —— Condition to carry on business—Testator giving up business.]—(1) By his will of 1906 a coal merchant devised & bequeathed his freehold coal wharf, where his business was carried on, & also his coal business, to his trustees upon trust to carry on the business until the younger of two named nephews attained twenty-five, on which event he directed his trustees to hand over to them the business, which he desired them to carry on in copartnership, & if they so carried on the business for five years to the satisfaction of his trustees, then he directed his trustees to convey his said freehold coal wharf to them in equal shares as tenants in common, to whom he devised the same absolutely. But if the business was not carried on by the nephews for five years to the satisfaction of his trustees, he directed his trustees to hold his coal wharf as part of his residuary estate, which was otherwise disposed of. In 1912 testator gave up his business, in which the two nephews, though of age, were not employed, & sold his stock in trade. He, however, retained the wharf until his death in 1925, having let it to tenants who used it for a different business.

The wharf was now claimed by the two nephews on the ground that the condition precedent having been rendered impossible by testator's own act was discharged, & the specific devise took effect:—Held: on the construction of the will & in the events that had happened, the wharf fell into residue.

2985. ——.] — Pltf. purchased a house & premises at a sale by auction. The third & fourth conditions of sale stipulated that the vendors would deliver an abstract of title, commencing with a conveyance of the property to J. D., dated in Jan. 1800, that the quantities, which in the particulars of sale were stated to be 76 feet frontage & upwards of 217 feet into the main road, were to be taken more or less. The fifth condition stated that the said J. D., died in 1800, having devised the property to his wife for life or widowhood; that he appeared to have made no devise of the reversion, & the property had been since dealt with on that supposition. The abstract of title traced the title from J. D., through his sons & co-heirs-at-law, the property being gavelkind. J. D. had made a will, by which he devised the property in question to his wife for life, or so long as she should remain a widow, & with the rest, residue & remainder of the produce of the sale of certain other property directed to be sold, after payment of certain legacies, he directed the same to be placed at interest, & he gave to his wife for life or widowhood the whole of such interest; & after her decease or second marriage, to his three sons & his said daughter Ann, equally to be divided between them, share & share alike: but if the share of his said daughter should not be legally claimed within three years after his wife's decease, then to his said three sons equally, or the survivors of them. The title deeds, stated the property to be only 204 feet in depth:—Held: assuming that J. D. did not die intestate as to the reversion in the property devised to his wife for life, & that his daughter Ann took an equal share in it with his three sons, under the residuary clause, yet, as it appeared Ann had made no claim within three years, according to the condition in the will, her title never accrued; & a good title had been deduced according to the contract of sale.—LETHBRIDGE v. KIRKMAN (1855), 25 L. 3004. —— Condition to settle property on marriage—Marriage without settlement—Absence of settlement due to neglect of trustee.]—Trust term by will to raise out of real estate portions for daughters, to be paid on marriage, upon condition, that they should be married with consent of their mother, or, after her death, of the trustees, & that the husband should previously make a settlement: the residue of the personal estate, subject to debts & legacies, to be applied in discharging the portions in case of the real estate, or for any purpose the trustees might judge most beneficial for the devisee. A marriage having taken place with the consent of the mother & the privity of the trustee, but without any settlement, by the neglect of the trustee, the husband having before & after the marriage offered all that was required of him, & been ready to execute a settlement within the condition, relief was given upon those circumstances by raising the portion upon executing the settlement.—O'CALLAGHAN v. COOPER (1799), 5 Ves. 117; 31 E. Where there is no bequest over, he who derives a benefit under the will, on condition of his executing a release within a specified time, shall not be deprived of that benefit in consequence of his not having executed the release within the prescribed period, if the parties can be placed in the same situation as if the condition had been strictly performed (LORD GIFFORD).—HOLLINRAKE v. LISTER (1826), 1 Russ. 500; 38 E. 3017. ——.]—A. devises his real estate to his son, charged with his debts & legacies, & devises £2,500 to his daughter; at the age of twenty-one, or marriage, provided, that if she should marry in the lifetime of her mother, without her consent in writing, then £500 to cease, & be applied towards payment of the debts. The daughter attains twenty-one, & marries without her mother's consent, the whole portion shall be raised, for it was vested in her at the time of the marriage.

The rule that where there is no devise over that the condition shall be taken only in terrorem, is a great deal too wide, for here in effect is no devise over, for though it be to go towards payment of debts, yet here appears to be no creditors concerned, none that are in danger of losing their debts (HARCOURT, LORD KEEPER).—KING v. WITHERS (1712), Gilb. He declares similar trusts as to three other sums of £6,000, making the remainder of the £24,000, for his three other nieces & their children. Proviso, that, in case any of his nieces should marry without such consent as therein prescribed, each, etc., so marrying, should forfeit the interest of her £6,000, & all other sums to which she may be entitled under his will ; & the respective sums of £6,000, & all such other sums, etc., should fall into his residue ; & he gives the residue in trust for his two nephews & their children, in case of the death of either without issue, his moiety to go over to & be divided among his nieces. Afterwards, by codicil, he gives to each of his nieces £2,000 in addition, "subject to the same powers, provisos, directions, & limitations, as are contained in the will respecting the sums of £6,000." S. who was of age at the date of the will, marries without the consent required : —Held : a forfeiture ; extending not only to the future interest of her £6,000, but to the capital, & also to the £2,000 given by the codicil, & to a fund set apart to answer an annuity, to which S. would otherwise have been entitled on the death of the annuitant. Qu. : whether the forfeiture would also extend to her share of the residue, in the event of the contingency upon which it is given over to testator's nieces.

A. In General.

3052. Duty to give consent.]—Whether conditions be precedent, or subsequent, if they are in restraint of marriage, the ct. have always put a favourable construction upon them to prevent a forfeiture. Where there is no objection to the person or estate of the gentleman who proposes, & the young lady herself is inclined to the match, trustees should consider themselves in the light of a parent, & readily come into a consent.—DALEY v. DESBOUVERIE (1738), 2 Atk. 261; 26 E. 3053. When consent presumed.]—After a lapse of twenty-eight years, a consent to marriage, so as to avoid a forfeiture, was, under the circumstances, presumed.

The marriage took place in 1825, & the party entitled in default never raised any question as to the consent having been given until 1852, after the death of the trustees & of A.:—Held: everything was to be presumed in favour of the consent; & though there was no distinct proof of consent, yet it was presumed from the conduct of the trustees subsequent to the marriage.—Re BIRCH (1853), 17 Beav. 358; 51 E. 3057. Whether may be subsequent to marriage.]—(1) A mother by her will says, that if her daughter marry with the consent of trustees, or the major part of them, & signified in writing, before such marriage had, then I give to her, & not otherwise, £800 & directed M. to pay her £30 yearly whilst she continued sole, by £15 each May day, & All Saints day, & charged all her real estate with debts of all kinds & legacies. The consent of the trustees after the marriage immaterial, for no subsequent approbation could amount to a performance of the condition, or dispense with a breach of it.

(2) It has long been the doctrine of this ct., that where a personal legacy is given to a child on condition of marrying with consent, that this is not a condition annexed to the legacy, but a declaration of testator in terrorem only.—REYNISH v. MARTIN (1746), 3 Atk. 330; 26 E. R. 642.

3061. May be expressed in other than prescribed manner.]—(1) Where a legacy was given on condition of the legatee marrying with the consent in writing of the exors., & he afterwards married with their approbation, but they [did not give] their consent in the manner required by the will:—Held: the legatee was entitled to his legacy, & the consent of one of the exors. who had not acted was not necessary.

3064. Must be free consent.]—(1) A condition attached to a gift to a minor in the event of his or her marrying under the age of twenty-one, that such marriage must be with the consent of his or her parents or guardians, is a perfectly reasonable & proper condition.

(2) If, under such circumstances, the marriage in fact take place without the free consent of the parent or guardian, such consent, in the absence of fraud on the part of the parent or guardian, will be deemed not to have been given, notwithstanding that the parent or guardian may have sanctioned the engagement to marry at some future time.

(3) The "consent" in order to avail in a ct. of equity, must be a free consent, & not one wrung from the parent or guardian by the misconduct of one or both of the parties to the marriage.

H. was contingently entitled, under her father's will, to a share in a certain fund in the event of her attaining the age of twenty-one, which did not happen, or marrying under that age, with the consent of her parents or guardians. C., her mother, was her guardian. In May, 1867, P. made a proposal of marriage to H., & was accepted by her. On P. applying to C. for her consent to the engagement C. told him that her daughter was too young to marry, but she would always be glad to see him at her house. C. wrote to P.'s father a letter, in which she said that her daughter was very young & would be all the better for a year or two at home, & that she should prefer P. being firmly established in business before anything could be decided upon. From that time until the marriage took place P. never directly asked C.'s consent to the marriage. In Aug. 1868, P. took H. from C.'s house without C.'s knowledge. He shortly afterwards telegraphed to C. to the effect that her daughter "was in safe hands," & also wrote a letter, but said not a word about marriage. C., believing that her daughter was in P.'s power, & that if P. did not marry the daughter her reputation was gone, sent a telegram & letter to P., giving her consent to the marriage. The marriage took place, but neither C.'s telegram nor her letter reached P. & H. till after the marriage :—Held : that until P. took H. away from her mother's house there had been no consent given by C. to the marriage ; the enforced consent given at last by C. to the marriage, even supposing it had been communicated to P. & H. before the marriage, was not such a consent as was contemplated by testator's will, so as to give H. a vested interest under testator's will in the event, which happened, of her dying under the age of twenty-one.—Re STEPHENSON'S TRUSTS (1870), 18 W. A. proposed to the trustees, to marry one of the daughters, who was an infant. The terms, as communicated to her by one of the trustees, were, that £500 should be paid to A., on his marriage, out of her portion, & that the remainder should be invested, in the names of trustees, for her sole use & benefit, the interest to be paid to her only. The daughter accepted the proposals, & asked the consent of the trustees. The same trustee then wrote a letter to the daughter, saying that he & his co-trustee had not then signed the consent, but were ready to do so as soon as requisite ; & a draft was prepared by which, subject to the payment of the £500 to the husband, the portion was settled on the intended husband during his solvency, then on the intended wife, for her separate use, for life, with remainder to the children, with remainder to the survivor of the intended husband & wife. 3091. —— —— Necessity for.]—A person in loco parentis is justified in altering his mind & withdrawing his consent to a marriage if circumstances subsequently come to his knowledge which, had they been known at the time, would have caused him originally to withhold his consent. This power of retractation, however, is not unlimited, & cannot be exercised for mere caprice or without just & exceptional reasons.

By a codicil made in 1891 testator directed that, in the event of his daughter marrying against her mother's wish, a legacy of £500 & her share in his residuary estate were to be settled on the daughter for life, with remainder to her children. In May, 1893, the daughter became engaged with the consent of testator & his wife, conditionally on the marriage being deferred for two years. In Feb. 1895, testator died; the engagement was still recognised by the widow, who stipulated for a further delay till Aug. To this the daughter agreed. Subsequently there were disputes between the mother & daughter as to the form of settlement & other matters; the daughter left her mother's house & was married in June. Immediately before the marriage the mother wrote withdrawing her consent to the marriage:—Held: under the circumstances the consent originally given could not be withdrawn & the daughter was absolutely entitled to the legacy & to her share in testator's residuary estate.—Re BROWN, INGALL v. BROWN, [1904] 1 Ch. 120; 73 L. The daughter was placed by the exor.'s with a clergyman, who, before she was twenty-one, with consent of one of the exors., permitted her to make a visit to her father; & he took that opportunity to marry her to a papist. 3100. Of person whose consent required.]—Devise & bequest of lands & furniture to A., testator's wife, for life, & after her death to H. & her assigns for life, in case she continued single & unmarried; & after her decease unto such person, etc., as she should by deed or will appoint, & for want of appointment, to L. & to M., their heirs, etc., as tenants in common; but in case H. should marry in the lifetime of A., & with her consent, or after her death, with the consent of J. & T., or the survivor, signified in writing, then H. & her assigns should enjoy the lands & furniture in the same manner she would have done if she had continued single & unmarried.

A., the testator's wife, & also J. & T., died. H. took possession of the estate, & married:—Held: H. took an estate for life, with a power of appointment, subject as to her life estate only to the condition of her remaining sole & unmarried, which was a condition subsequent; & as the compliance with it became impossible by the act of God, her estate for life became absolute, & she might execute the power of appointment.—AISLABIE v. RICE (1818), 3 Madd. 256; 2 Moore, C. 3101. ——— ———.]—A condition of marriage with consent:—Held: subsequent & not precedent, & its performance having become impossible, by the act of God, was dispensed with.

Testator gave a share of his residuary real & personal estate to his daughter, her heirs, exors., administrators & assigns, to be paid at twenty-one or on her day of marriage, provided it should take place with the consent of his widow. There was a gift over in case of her death "without having attained twenty-one years or been so married as aforesaid":—Held: the consent was a condition subsequent, & the daughter, having married without such consent, her mother being dead at the time, had a vested interest, & her share ought to be transferred to the trustees of her settlement, though she was still an infant.—COLLETT v. COLLETT (1866), 35 Beav. 312; 14 L. After the testator's death his daughter intermarried with J. without having obtained his written consent to the marriage:—Held: that the restriction was only intended to apply to marriage during testator's life, & the condition having become impossible of fulfilment, the gift over did not take effect.—BOOTH v. MEYER (1877), 38 L. children, & bequeathed a legacy to each of his daughters on her attaining twenty-one or marrying with the consent of her "guardian or guardians," which should first happen. He gave the residue to his wife for life, &, after her death, gave a further legacy to each daughter who should attain twenty-one or marry with the consent "of her guardian or guardians." He empowered the trustees during the minority of the daughters, to pay the income of their contingent legacies to his wife for their maintenance & education, &, in case of her decease, empowered them to apply so much of the income of the contingent legacies as they might think fit for the maintenance of the infant daughters presumptively entitled thereto, with power to pay it to the guardian or guardians of the daughters for that purpose. After the death of the wife, a daughter married under twenty-one without the consent of any guardian or guardians, there being none, & died shortly afterwards, under the age of twenty-one years: —Held: the condition was not complied with, & the daughter took no vested interest in the legacies, the condition not being made inoperative by there being no guardians, since guardians could have been appointed by the ct., & testator, on the language of his will, must be taken to have contemplated such an appointment. (2) By testator's marriage settlement the trust funds, after the death of the husband & wife, were to be held in trust for such children as, being a son or sons, attained twenty-one, or being a daughter or daughters, attained that age or married with the consent of their parents or guardians:—Held: the same rule applied to this gift, & the daughter took no vested interest; (3) the consent of a guardian appointed by the infant herself would not have satisfied the condition.—Re BROWN'S WILL, Re BROWN'S SETTLEMENT (1881), 18 Ch. The sons attained twenty-one in testator's lifetime, & the daughter married under that age with testator's consent:—Held: the legacies to the sons & daughter became payable on testator's death, &, consequently, they bore interest from that time.—COVENTRY v. HIGGINS (1844), 14 Sim. 30; 8 Jur. 182; 60 E. But if she married without the consent of the trustees he declared certain trusts of the whole fund for the benefit of his daughter & her children. She married in W.'s lifetime, & without his consent, but he was afterwards reconciled to the marriage:—Held: the husband was entitled to one-third of the stock, & the remainder was to be held upon the same trusts as it would have been had the daughter married after W.'s death, & with the trustees' consent.—WHEELER v. WARNER (1823), 1 Sim. & St. 304; 57 E. SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

3111. General rule.]—Testator gave the residue of his estate to his trustees upon trust for children living at his death as tenants in common, & provided that the share which "would belong" to any daughter married at his decease should be paid to the trustees of her marriage settlement to be held upon the trusts of certain moneys settled thereby "or such of them as shall be then subsisting & capable of taking effect." The settled funds of a married daughter were held in default of issue, in trust for testator, his exors., administrators, & assigns. A share of testator's residue was paid over to the trustees of this settlement. The daughter survived testator & died without issue:—Held: there was no effective disposition of the daughter's share of residue after her death without issue, & it went to her representatives by virtue of the original absolute gift to her in the will.

No one can take under a will who does not survive testator (JOYCE, J.).—Re CURRIE'S SETTLEMENT, Re ROOPER, ROOPER v. WILLIAMS, [1910] 1 Ch. 329; 79 L. J. Ch. 285; 101 L. T. 899; 54 Sol. Jo. 270.

3133. —— —— ——.]—Upon the marriage of testator & testatrix certain estates were settled to the use of the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, remainder to the children of the marriage, &, in default of issue of the marriage, to the use of the survivor of the husband & wife, & his or her heirs & assigns. Testator, by his will, made during the coverture, having other estates not in settlement, devised all his real estates to testatrix for her life, &, upon her decease, to the use of A., B. & C., in trust for sale, & out of the proceeds of such sale, & the residue of his personal estate, to pay certain legacies, &, subject thereto, to stand possessed of one-fourth part of the said trust moneys, for such purposes as testatrix should appoint, &, in default of appointment, for her next of kin ; & to pay & dispose of the other three-fourths equally amongst A., B. & C., their exors., administrators, & assigns. Testator died in the lifetime of testatrix, leaving no child of the marriage. Testatrix, by her will, made in 1839, after the death of A., B. & C., reciting that she believed it was testator's wish that the settled estates should pass by his will, & she was desirous of fulfilling his wishes, devised the settled estates to the uses by testator's will declared concerning the same, & in exercise of the power of appointment given to her by testator of the fourth of his estate, appointed the same to her trustees, upon the trusts which she declared of her own residuary estate, & directed her real estate to be sold & fall into such residue, which she bequeathed to several legatees :—Held : there being, in the events which happened, no uses declared of the settled estates by the will of testator, the specific devise of such settled estates by the will of testatrix was void, or incapable of taking effect.

The claims of the beneficial devisees represented by Mr. H., who died before the wife, would fail upon the same ground ; & it was therefore gratuitously, though not extrajudicially, that in the course of the argument I said, that the wife's will must speak from her own death, & that no person who did not survive her could take under her will, even if the trusts of her will could be found in that of her husband (SIR J. WIGRAM, V.-C.).—CULSHA v. CHEESE (1849), 7 Hare, 236 ; 18 L. J. Ch. 269 ; 13 Jur. 802 ; 68 E. R. 97.

3134. —— —— ——.]—A father, on the marriage of his daughter, covenanted that if she should survive him or leave any child, children, or issue, he would by will give & devise, or otherwise effectually settle & assure to trustees, a share equal with his other children of the property he should have at his death to the uses therein mentioned, being uses for the benefit of the husband & wife & the children of the marriage, with a clause of survivorship & accruer in the event of children dying under twenty-one & without issue. Some years afterwards the father made a will, giving property to trustees upon the trusts therein declared, the limitations being in substance the same as those set out in the articles. The children of the marriage all died without issue in the lifetime of the covenantor, one of them only having attained twenty-one. The wife survived her father :—Held : the representatives of the child who attained twenty-one were not entitled to anything, for the covenantor was at liberty to make a settlement either by deed or will, & he was not bound by the covenant so to frame his will as to guard the child's interest from lapse.—Re BROOKMAN'S TRUST (1869), 5 Ch. "or his personal representatives," the cts. have construed it simply as another way of giving B. a vested interest upon testator's death; & B. dying before testator, the bequest has been held to lapse; but if, instead of "personal representatives," the word "heirs" be used, it shows testator intended the persons he designates as "heirs" to take by way of substitution whenever B. may die, & there shall be no lapse although B. should die before testator.

3207. Death of legatee calculated for-Intervening life interest.]—Bequest of the residue to A. for life; & after her death legacies were given to B. or to her proper representative, in case she should not be living at the decease of A. & to four other persons or their representatives or representative; one of the four died in the life of testator; & another survived him, but died in the life of A.; the former lapsed, the latter vested.

Another point arising upon this will is as to the legacies given by testator to the children of his sister E., or their representatives or representative. One of those children died in the life of testator. Another survived testator, but died in the life of his widow. The question is, whether they are vested & transmissible to the representatives? I am very clearly of opinion, the legacy to C. is good. This is stronger than the common case of a legacy to A. & his representatives. There those words are surplusage ; for if the legatee dies before the day of payment, it would go to his representatives. But in this case there is a reason for inserting them. This is not an immediate legacy, but after the death of another person. There is therefore an interval in which the legatee might die ; & though it vested, he might not live to receive it. That addition might be inserted to put it out of doubt ; & must mean in case they die in the life of testator's wife. I desire to be understood to determine it upon that circumstance, that there is a life intervening (LORD ALVANLEY, M.R.).—CORBYN v. FRENCH (1799), 4 Ves. 418 ; 31 E. R. 213.

3224. —— —— ——.]—A father devised real property to his son, who died in the lifetime of the father, leaving a daughter, who was living at the death of the father. The son devised his residuary real estate to trustees. This devise included the property devised by the father's will, & took effect with regard to it by virtue of above sect.

This additional property is left to go & devolve as part of the property of deceased child. If the child, while living, entered for valuable consideration into any contract with reference to such property, as, for example, by way of sale or mtge., or by way of covenant in a marriage settlement, by such contract the property will be bound. If the child made a will by which such property is, by appropriate language, disposed of, either specifically or otherwise, the property will pass under such disposition. 3225. —— —— Meaning of "issue living."]—To prevent the lapse of a legacy to a legatee, being a child or other issue, who may die in the lifetime of testator, it is not necessary that the issue of the legatee who is alive at the death of testator, should be the same issue who was alive at the death of the legatee; it is sufficient that any issue, e.g. a grandchild of the legatee, should be in existence at the death of testator. Such a legacy is a vested interest in the legatee, & passes to his representatives or under his will, as the case may be, & not to the issue, whose existence prevents the lapse.—In the Goods of PARKER (1860), 1 Sw. & Tr. 523; 31 L. At the time of making his will testator had under the trusts of his marriage settlement a testamentary power of appointment in favour of the children of the marriage over the funds settled by both his wife & himself, & the trust of the latter fund in default of appointment was for testator, his exors., administrators, & assigns absolutely.

The son died in testator's lifetime leaving children who survived testator. By a codicil to his will testator provided as follows : "Whereas since the date of my said will my son has died & the legacy & share of residue given to him by my said will have lapsed. Now with a view of making some provision for the two children of my said son I give to each of them a legacy of £100," & in all other respects he confirmed his will :—Held : inasmuch as testator believed that the death of his son had caused the gifts of the legacy & share of residue to lapse, his failure to make further disposition of the legacy & share of residue showed an intention to let them lapse, & thereby "a contrary intention" appeared within Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 33, so as to prevent the application of that sect. ; the legacy & share of residue given to his son were undisposed of ; the gift of furniture took effect by virtue of sect. 33, & the legacies to the son's children were payable.

3252. —— —— ——.]—Testatrix gave the residue of her estate in trust for all or such of her brothers & sisters who should be living at the decease of the survivor of two of her sisters in equal shares, with a substitutionary gift to the then living children of parents who should be then dead. She then settled the share of a sister, C., in trust to pay her the income for life, & after her decease the capital to be held in trust for her children as she should appoint, & in default of appointment to vest in her children who should attain twenty-one, or being daughters marry, with a gift over in default of children to the persons entitled to the other shares. At the period of distribution all the brothers & sisters of testatrix were dead. C. alone had had issue, & they had attained twenty-one, but had all died before the period of distribution :—Held : the gift of the settled share had not failed in consequence of C.'s death before the period of distribution, & therefore the representatives of C.'s children were entitled to testatrix's residuary estate.—Re WHITMORE, WALTERS v. HARRISON, [1902] 2 Ch. 66 ; 71 L. SECT. 8.—FUTURE GIFTS.

3257. Death of legatee before time for payment—Legacy payable at certain future time.]—(1) It is now fully settled, if a pecuniary legacy is given on condition of marriage with consent, & there is no devise over, such condition is void.

(2) Where a condition has been performed to a reasonable intent, the ct. will dispense with the want of circumstances, as where the major part of the trustees consent, or where they give an implied, not an express consent.

(3) Where an estate is to arise on a condition precedent, it cannot vest till that condition is performed.

(4) Though the civil law has no such term as condition precedent, yet the rule in that law, conditio suspendit legatum, is the thing in effect.

(5) It is laid down as a rule that governs in devises of personal estates, that where there is no devise over, the condition is only in terrorem, but I rather take it this is laid down as a rule to construe testator's intention, but not that it is in all events a general rule that such conditions shall be in terrorem only, unless there are words of limitation over, for testator's intent may be known other ways (WILLES, C.J.).

(6) Swinburne, part 4, sect. 17, fol. 308, at pp. 377, 378, takes the difference where legacy is given at a day certain or time uncertain ; in the first case, the legatee dying, his exor. generally may recover the legacy when the time is come ; but if the legacy is given to be paid at an uncertain time, as where testator's daughter shall marry, if he die before her marriage, the legacy is utterly extinguished (COMYNS, J.).—HARVEY v. ASTON (LADY) (1737), 1 Atk. 361 ; 2 Com. 726 ; 2 Eq. SUB-SECT. 2.—TENANCY IN COMMON.

A. In General.

See, generally, Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 34.

3291. Gift to executors—Refusal of one to act.]—Testator, after bequeathing certain shares of his residuary estate, the produce of a mixed fund, to his son & daughter respectively, directed that the interest of the share given to the son should be applied for his maintenance & education till twenty-one, & that after that period he should have power to receive & dispose of such interest till his age of twenty-five, when the whole of the property bequeathed to him was to be at his own disposal. He further directed that half the property given to his daughter should be invested, in trust for her maintenance, education, use & benefit, during her life, & for her children, if any, after her decease; &, if there was no issue living at her decease, the said property was to devolve to his son; & in case he was dead also, & had left no issue, the said property was to devolve to his exors. thereinafter named. The other half of the property bequeathed to his daughter he directed to be invested for her sole use & benefit till twenty-one, & that the said property should then be at her own disposal; &, if either the son or daughter should die under twenty-one, the property bequeathed to the one so dying should devolve to the other; &, if both should die under that age, then the property bequeathed to them should devolve to & become the property of the four persons therein named & described, to be divided betwixt them in equal proportions, & their heirs for ever; which four persons he also appointed his exors. One of the four persons named exors. renounced probate, & declined to act; & afterwards both the son & daughter died under twenty-one & without issue:—Held: the one-fourth share in the residue, to which the exor. who had renounced would have been entitled as one of the legatees over, if he had acted, was a lapsed legacy, & did not devolve to the three other persons named with him as legatees of that residue.—BARBER v. BARBER (1838), 3 My. & Cr. 688; 8 L. 3324. ——.]—Testator, who had been twice married, made a general bequest of his residuary, real & personal estate, except what belonged to his late wife, to trustees upon trust to sell & divide the proceeds amongst his six named children in equal shares, with a direction that the shares to which his children should be entitled under his will should be vested in them at his decease. He then directed his trustees to divide the personal estate of his late wife, to which he had become entitled on her death intestate, amongst the three named children by her. One of these three children, P., was dead at the date of the will, his father knowing that he had been reported missing during the war, but refusing to believe in his death:—Held: (1) owing to the death of P. before the date of the will his one-third share in the specific property lapsed & fell into the general residue, & did not devolve upon the two children of testator's late wife who were alive at the date of the will; (2) the one-sixth share of P. in testator's real & residuary estate was, in the events which happened, undisposed of, & passed as to the real estate to testator's heir-at-law & as to the personal estate to testator's next of kin.—Re WHISTON, WHISTON v. WOOLLEY, [1924] 1 Ch. 122; 93 L. 3328. —— Direction to fall into residue.]—A. B. by will gave real & personal estate to a trustee to sell & convert & out of the moneys to pay debts, & to divide the residue between five persons, named, equally, By a codicil A. B. bequeathed to the issue of S. R., one of such persons, all the effects which by the will she had bequeathed to S. R., who was stated to be dead, but if there should be no issue living at A. B.'s decease, or being such, if such effects should not be claimed by such issue within twelve months after her decease, then such effects should fall into & be considered as part of the residue of the personal estate. S. R. never had any issue:—Held: S. R.'s share of residue under the will was undisposed of.—Re BARKER'S ESTATE, HETHERINGTON v. LONGRIGG (1880), 15 Ch. D. 635; 29 W. R. 281.

A. having died during testator's lifetime:—Held: the words directing the vesting of the legacies indicated an intention on the part of testator to give the whole of the residue to such only of the residuary legatees as should be living at his death.—Re FEATHERSTONE'S TRUSTS (1882), 22 Ch. By a codicil after referring to the death of D., testatrix revoked whatever interest D. had in her will. A., B., & C. survived the testatrix:—Held: the gift of survivorship was intended to be general & not confined to the case of only one legatee dying, &, in any event, the revocation clause of the codicil must be construed as directing the residuary bequest of the will to be read as if D. was not one of the residuary legatees &, consequently, in the events that had happened D.'s share was not undisposed of but went to the other legatees.—Re RADCLIFFE, YOUNG v. BEALE (1903), 51 W. The list included F. W. & T. W. By a codicil testator revoked the gifts in favour of F. W. & T. Revocation by codicil of the gifts to C. & to the children of A., with a declaration that they should not be residuary legatees:—Held: the gift of residue was to the residuary legatees as a class, notwithstanding that some of the individuals to take were named; & the effect of the will & codicil, taken together, was to give all the residue to the legatees whose bequests were not revoked.—CLARK v. PHILLIPS (1853), 17 Jur. 886.

3337. —— ——.]—D. by his will directed his trustees to divide his residuary estate into as many equal shares as he should have daughters who should survive him, or should have died in his lifetime leaving issue him surviving, & to appropriate one such share to each such daughter. He then directed each daughter's share to be settled on herself & her children. By a codicil he revoked the gift of a share to his daughter L. All his daughters, including L., survived him:—Held: the gift was to a class, & therefore there was no lapse as to the revoked share, but the residue was divisible among the daughters other than L. in equal shares.—Re DUNSTER, BROWN v. HEYWOOD, [1909] 1 Ch. 103; 78 L. 3338. Member of class attesting will—Remainder take whole.]—Testator devised lands to his niece S. for life, & after her death to her husband J. for his life, & then "to be equally divided among the children of the above-named J. & S., either by the proceeds from the sale of the properties or otherwise, as may be considered most advantageous at the time." There were eight children of the niece living at the date of the will & at the death of testator, of whom two were respectively named T. & S. T. was an attesting witness to the will. S. was present when testator executed the will, but she did not sign it in his presence so as to make her a good attesting witness within Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26):—Held: the devise was to the "children" as a class, as tenants in common; &, as the attesting witnesses (assuming S. to have been an attesting witness) were by reason of sect. 15 of above Act incapable of taking at the death of testator, they could not be reckoned as members of that class, & their shares, therefore, went to the rest of the class, the other children, & not to the heir-at-law.—FELL v. BIDDOLPH (1875), L. G. as were living at the date of her will. J. G. had died before the date of the will & had left no children:—Held: there was no lapse of the share given to the children of J. G., but the whole residue was divisible among the other persons named.—Re SPILLER, SPILLER v. MADGE (1881), 18 Ch. D. 614; 50 L. J. Ch. 750; 45 L. T. 41; 29 W. R. 782.

3340. Division of residue between two classes—Forfeiture of share of one of a class.]—Testator directed his trustees to stand possessed of the proceeds of sale & conversion of his residuary real & personal estate, "As to three equal seventh parts thereof" in trust for a class of persons living at his death (hereinafter called class A.) as tenants in common; & "As to the remaining four equal seventh parts thereof" in trust for another class of persons living at his death (hereinafter called class B.) as tenants in common. He provided that if a certain event should happen in his lifetime the share of a certain member of class A. "shall lapse & form part of my residuary personal estate." The event happened & the share lapsed:—Held: three-sevenths of the lapsed share went to the effective members of class A. & four-sevenths to class B.—Re WAND, ESCRITT v. WAND, [1907] 1 Ch. 391; 76 L. 3355. —— —— Gift of residue to executors.]—(1) A bequest, after various legacies given, was made, of the whole of testator's real & personal estate, into the hands of two persons, as his sole exors., "in trust to dispose of the whole," according to testator's directions, with a concluding bequest in these words : "To my two exors., whom I appoint to this purpose, in trust to see the above fulfilled, I bequeath ten guineas, together with all the rest residue of my estate, whether real & personal, wherever deposited, after my funeral expenses, debts, or incidental charges attending the performance hereof are paid by them, my said exors." One of the exors. died in testator's lifetime, the other survived him seventeen days & died, having made his will appointing exors. On the hearing of a cause, by bill filed against the exors. of the surviving exor. of the original testator, by the next of kin, praying to be declared entitled to the general residue (many of the legatees having died in the lifetime of the testator) :—Held : the exor. of the first testator was, under the circumstances, not precluded by having done no act in his lifetime, manifesting his intention to take on himself the burthen of the execution of the will ; & under the words of the will he & his exors. were entitled to the lapsed legacies, & to the whole of the residue, from whatever cause arising, beneficially, & not as trustees.

(2) Qu. : whether exors., when entitled to a general residue as exors., are entitled to that part of it which arises from legacies that have lapsed.

Testator declared, that the share to which each of his daughters on her attaining the age of twenty-one years, or marrying under that age, should become entitled under the trusts aforesaid should be held by the trustees in trust for such daughter for her life & afterwards for her children : —Held : the children of a daughter who died in the lifetime of the testator did not take any interest.—STEWART v. JONES (1859), 3 De G. & J. 532 ; 33 L. 3360. ——.]—Under 27 Hen. 8, c. xvi, & Bolton Estates Act, 1863 (c. vi), M. was tenant in tail of an undivided third share of the Bolton estates. In May, 1901, M. executed a codicil to his will whereby he purported in exercise of the powers contained in the two private Acts, & of all other powers, enabling him in that behalf, to appoint the income of his third or other share in the Bolton estates for the jointure of his widow. He died in Mar. 1902 :—Held : the jointure might be created by testamentary instrument; & therefore testator had power by will or codicil to appoint the income of the entailed estates for the jointure of the widow, & such power was well exercised in her favour.—Re BOLTON ESTATES, RUSSELL v. MEYRICK, [1903] 2 Ch. 461; 72 L. 3361. —— Power to same donee under two wills — Whether power cumulative.] — Testator devised his estates to his eldest son for life, with power to charge them with a jointure of £600 a year, & to raise portions for younger children not exceeding a certain amount. The brother of testator died some time after, & devised his estates "upon & for & subject to the like uses, & to, for, & upon the like trusts, powers, provisions & limitations, & to & for the like intents & purposes as testator's late brother by his will had devised, given, or directed of & concerning his estates." By virtue of the powers contained in the last testator's will, the tenant for life granted to his wife a jointure of £100 a year in addition to the £600 a year which he had power to appoint to her under the will of the first testator :—Held : the words of reference did not multiply the charges, & the widow was not entitled to the additional £400 a year.—LEIGH v. LEIGH (1870), 22 L. T. 837; 18 W. R. 991.

3362. Power to dispose of interest in partnership —Use of words "name or appoint."]—(1) In a partnership deed it was stipulated that testator's interest in the partnership concern after his death, & during the term of the partnership, should go to such persons as he should by will name or appoint, & in default of appointment, that it should devolve to his wife; in case of her death, to his children in equal shares; & in case of the death of all his children to his exors. or administrators :—Held : the true construction of this is not to create a technical power of appointment, but to reserve to the testator an absolute power of disposition by will.

(2) Testator made a will, not containing any allusion to the power, by which he gave all his estate & effects to one of his children :—Held : his interest in the partnership passed by this bequest.—PONTON v. DUNN (1830), 1 Russ. & M. 402; 39 E. R. 155.

different relations, & directing them to sell all other his real estates, & apply the money to some of those relations; he gave £5 apiece to C. (who survived B.) & to D. the only child of B. & C., "in consideration of the ample provision made for them after my decease by G. who has by his will devised to them certain estates in R., now in my possession, which, though I could now legally dispose of, I mean fully to confirm to them, according to the intent of the said will." After this A. suffered a recovery, & declared the uses to himself for life, remainder to such persons & for such uses as he by deed, will, or codicil, to be properly attested, should appoint; & for default of such appointment, to C. for life, remainder to D. for life, with remainder over in fee. After this he made a codicil, duly executed, whereby he confirmed his said will in all respects not thereby altered; & after making some alterations in respect of other property, he declared such codicil to be part of his said will:—Held: C. & D. took nothing under the will & codicil of A. in the property which had belonged to G.; for it did not appear that A. intended by his will to devise the property in question, but rather to let it pass as it was devised by the will of G.: & his confirmation of his will by his codicil could not carry it further. But even if he had intended to exercise a devising power by the will, according to the estates carved out by G.'s will for C. & D., yet he afterwards altered that intent, & took a new estate in the premises by suffering a recovery, the uses of which were different from those of G.'s will; reserving to himself the power of appointment by deed, will, or codicil; & when he executed a codicil afterwards, confirming his will in all respects except where altered, or revoked by his codicil, & then making specific alterations as to other parts of his property, without reference to his power or to the property in question (though such reference be not essentially necessary to the execution of a power, if it plainly appear that the party meant to execute it) nothing appeared to show that he meant to execute the power by his codicil confirming his will generally, supposing it could take effect through the medium of such a will.—LANE v. WILKINS (1808), 10 East, 241; 103 E. The wife devises all the freehold & copyhold lands, except the copyhold in H., to her daughter & her heirs, & that copyhold to the heir-at-law of testator & his heirs.

It is clear, that under the words "such of his children," the wife of testator, though a trustee in some sort, had a full power to devise the whole to the daughter, if she had thought fit (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—MACEY v. SHURMER (1739), 1 Atk. 389: 26 E. R. 249, L. C.

A. died, leaving three sons, the eldest of whom was tenant for life of the devised estates, & no grandchild:—Held: inasmuch as there might have been a grandchild born in A.'s lifetime, & as such grandchild would have been among the objects of the power, the appointment of the residue of the £16,000 to a grandchild, who, in the events that had happened, was not an object of the power, did not raise a case of election against the children, & they were entitled to have the appointment of that residue declared invalid, & yet to retain all the benefits given them by the will.—BULWER v. HOARE (1825), 3 L. 3393. —— Unattested codicil.]—By the custom of the manor of S., the legal interest in lands of customary tenure, parcel of the manor, is not devisable, but is transferred by a deed of bargain & sale, having the effect of a surrender, in which the operating words are, "bargain, sell, & surrender," & on the presentment or production of which, admittance is granted to the alienee; but an equitable interest in such customary lands is capable of being passed by devise without regard to the custom. A tenant of this manor, who was seised of customary lands, conveyed them by a deed of bargain, sale, & surrender, to a trustee, upon trust for such person as the tenant, by any deed or instrument in writing or by his last will or any codicil thereto or any instrument in the nature of a last will or codicil, to be by him legally executed, should appoint or devise the same; & under this conveyance the trustee was admitted:—Held: the equitable interest in the lands would not pass by an unattested codicil of the tenant.—WILLAN v. LANCASTER (1826), 3 Russ. 108; 38 E. m. Power of court to effectuate intention.]—In the construction of an imperfect instrument by which a power has been created, a judge is never justified in either striking out or inserting in order to arrive at the intention of the donor of the power, unless there be no other means by which his clear & manifest intention can be power so to do, which she had not.—CHURCH v. KEMBLE (1832), 5 Sim. 525 ; 3 L. J. Ch. 65 ; 58 E. R. 435.

3400. —— Where gift over in default of appointment.]—Bequest, after the death of A., of £2,500, as A. should appoint, with a gift over "of the same" in default, & to be paid with interest from A.'s death. A. appointed a part to B., & £1,630, to other persons, & directed the said sums to be paid at the decease of B., except the one left to himself, which was to be payable at A.'s decease :—Held : the interest on the £1,630, accruing between the death of A. & B. neither passed to the appointees of that sum, nor to B. by implication, but went over, as in default of appointment.—HENDERSON v. CONSTABLE (1842), 5 Beav. 297 ; 11 L. J. Ch. 332 ; 49 E. R. 592.

3401. —— Gift of legacies to some objects of power—Gift of residue & appointable fund to others.]—Testatrix, having power to appoint certain funds by will in favour of A., B., C., D., & E., in such parts, shares, & proportions as she might think fit, & having no other power, by her will gave legacies of £5 each to A., B., & C., & all the residue of her property, of whatever kind, & wheresoever situate, & over which she had any power of appointment, to D. & E., & died leaving some personal estate of her own :—Held : the will was a valid execution of the power.—GAINSFORD v. DUNN (1874), L. E. by will, without reference to the power, gives £100, & the whole of her household furniture, to pltf. It was charged by the bill, & not denied, that testatrix had no personal property, at the time of her death, besides some household furniture to a very small amount in value; but no evidence was gone into, & an inquiry was asked as to the state of the property at the time of making the will, with the view of ascertaining that testatrix must have intended the gift of the £100, as in execution of her power. 3415. —— ——.]—A father, on his son's marriage, conveyed a certain farm to the use of himself & his wife successively for life, with remainder to the children of the son. A power was reserved to the father by deed or will to charge all or part of the hereditaments thereby settled, with any sum or sums not exceeding £500, for the portions of his younger children, & to create a term for securing the same. The father, by his will, devised the said farm to his son in fee, charged with the payment of legacies of £200, £200 & £100 to testator's three daughters respectively. The will contained no reference to the settlement, & no limitation of any term, nor did the father otherwise exercise the power:—Held: the will operated as an execution of the power of appointment, of which the father was donee under the settlement.—DAVIES v. DAVIES (1858), 28 L. 3417. Power to appoint proceeds of sale of land—Devise of all lands.]—A general devise of all lands of which testatrix had power to dispose, is not a good execution of a power to appoint moneys, which were to arise from the sale of land.—ADAMS v. AUSTEN (1829), 3 Russ. 461; 38 E. R. 648.

3418. Bequest of all sums & other interest under donor's will.]—Testator gave £3,000 to trustees for C. for life; remainder to such persons as she should appoint. C. by her will disposed of all her personal estate, & then gave all sums, messuages, etc., & other interest to which she was entitled under testator's will:—Held: the latter gift was a good execution of the power.—MAPLES v. BROWN (1828), 2 Sim. 327; 57 E. 3419. Power of appointment over two funds—Specific disposition of one fund—General bequest of residue of personal estate.]—A person having a power of appointment, by deed or will, over two sums, one of which is standing in her own name, sells the funds standing in her own name, & purchases long annuities with a part of that fund, & disposes of these long annuities by her will; but makes no allusion to the other fund; her will contains a general bequest of all the residue of her personal estate:—Held: this bequest is an execution of the power.—NEWMAN v. WALL (1833), 2 L. J. Ch. 208.

3420. Devise of whole fund—Lapse of gift to one of appointees—Effect of.]—Upon the marriage of J. with P., his intended wife, a settlement was made of a certain fund among all & every the sons & daughters of P. in such manner as P. should by will appoint, & in default of appointment, among the sons & daughters, & the children of such sons & daughters, in case any should happen to be dead leaving issue, in equal shares; the children to take the parents' shares. P. made her will, whereby she gave the fund between her four children C., L., B. & M.; C., one of them, died before her mother, leaving issue:—Held: the appointment was well executed, & each of the surviving children, L., B. & M. took one-fourth under the will, & one-fourth of the other fourth, as in default of appointment, & the children of C., deceased, took the remaining one-fourth of one-fourth.—GUINAND v. NAISH (1845), 6 L. T. O. S. 18; 9 Jur. 703.

3421. Devise of all property "comprised in recited settlement."]—By a settlement, lands in Black Acre & White Acre were conveyed to trustees upon various trusts, & subject thereto upon trust for several children as A. should by deed or will appoint, & in default, among such children equally as tenants in common in fee. Two of the trustees never acted; the other sold the lands in White Acre & purchased lands in Brown Acre with part of the money, &, in a suit, invested the remainder in consols. In the same suit the lands in Black Acre & in Brown Acre, & the consols, were declared to be the trust estate, & subject to the settlement. A. by will, reciting the settlement & all the facts relating to what was the property, subject to the trusts of the settlement, appointed pursuant to her power therein, & devised & bequeathed "all the real & personal estate mentioned & comprised in the said recited settlement, & all other her real & personal estate," to C., D., E. & F., four of the children :—Held : the lands in Brown Acre & the stock passed, by the appointment, to these four children absolutely.—EASTERBY v. FENWICK (1851), 17 L. 3422. Personalty held on trusts corresponding with trusts of real estate—Will varying order of succession to real estate—Effect on personalty.]—Testator by his will, devised his real estate, upon trust for his brother for life, & after his death upon trust for the brother's four sons in order as named in the will, & their respective issue male in strict settlement severally in succession according to seniority ; & he directed his personal estate to be held upon such trusts as would best correspond with the trusts thereinbefore declared concerning the real estate. By a codicil, after reciting the trusts in the will relating to the real estate, testator directed that his will should be read as if there were contained therein, immediately after the limitation upon trust for his brother for life, a limitation upon trust for the brother's four sons, & their respective issue male in such order of succession as testator's wife should appoint. Power to appoint trust fund—Appointment of "residue" to trustees for appointee—On trust to pay specified sum as appointee should appoint—Right of appointee to immediate payment of specified sum.]—A feme coverte had power by will to appoint a trust fund, of which £2,000 was payable immediately, & the remainder subject to her husband's life interest therein. She appointed the £2,000, & directed the trustees, after the decease of the husband, to stand possessed of the "residue" of the stock, after payment thereout of the £2,000, upon trust to pay £5,700 as the husband should appoint, & to apply the residue in payment of a number of legacies. The husband appointed the £5,700 to himself :—Held : notwithstanding there was a probability that the fund would prove insufficient for the payment of all the legacies, he was entitled to immediate payment of the £5700. The "residue" applicable to the payment of the legacies (other than the £5,700) meant simply what remained after payment of the £5,700, & not a proportionate share of the fund.—VIVIAN v. MORTLOCK (1855), 21 Beav. 252 ; 52 E. b. Declaration in favour of wife & children - Variation in favour of beneficiary—Creditor.]—Under a benefit certificate in a fraternal society, the sum insured, $2,000, was made payable on insured's death to his wife & children. Being indebted to a daughter in the sum of £3,000, he indorsed on the certificate a transfer of the insurance to, & surrendered the certificate & to appoint a sum of money, not necessarily working a transmutation of property like an appointment of land, was meant to be ambulatory during the life of the person who was to make the appointment: & therefore, that an execution of it by deed, which in fact was retained in her own possession, might be revoked by cancellation animo cancellandi, though it contained no power of revocation.

(2) As the mere act of cutting off her name & seal from the deed was equivocal, it might be explained, & its effect done away, by showing, from what was said by her at the time, that she did it under a mistaken notion that she had provided an effectual appointment by her will made after the deed, & that the deed was therefore useless; whereas, in truth, her will could not operate as an appointment, as it contained no direction for raising the money upon the obligor's estate, but, proceeded upon the supposition as therein expressed, that the children of her appointee, who was dead at the time of the will made, "would acquire the said £1,000 under & by virtue of the deed of appointment," & giving all the rest & residue of her estates & effects to them & others, "on the express condition that they, the children, should bring into hotchpot with such residue, etc., the said £1,000." Whether she mistook the contents of her will at the time she cut off her name & seal, & made the declaration before mentioned, which would be a mistake in fact, or whether she mistook the legal operation of her will, which would be a mistake in law, in either case the mistake annulled the cancellation.—PERROTT v. PERROTT (1811), 14 East, 423; 104 E. 3442. —— Whole money not raised.]—Testatrix, having the power to raise & appoint a sum of £10,000, out of certain real estate, after directing that sum to be raised & appointing £5,000 of it to A., proceeded to direct the residue to be distributed in the proportions thereinafter mentioned, naming certain beneficiaries, among others, a charity. She then "gave & bequeathed" to B., C., & D., certain sums, & provided that, in the event of any of the legatees or appointees dying, in her lifetime, their share should go over to other persons. The money thus disposed of amounted to £8,950:—Held: this was a good appointment of the whole £10,000; & ordered that, after setting aside £5,000 for A., the residue was to be apportioned among the remaining appointees, including the charity, in proportion to the amounts set against their names.—CUST v. MIDDLETON (1868), 18 L. SECT. 7.—REVOCATION OF APPOINTMENT.

3444. By deed.]—By deed of Nov. 4, 1800 (being the settlement made on the marriage of A. & B.), the intended wife B., in exercise of a general power of appointment vested in her by a previous deed of May 4, 1799, appointed certain freehold houses to the use of trustees, during the joint lives of herself & her husband, to her separate use, with remainder in the event of her dying in the lifetime of her husband (which happened), as she should appoint by will, attested by three witnesses, with limitations over. Shortly after her marriage, B. by will duly attested by three witnesses, devised the houses to her husband in fee; afterwards, in 1811, she & her husband executed a deed, attested by two witnesses, by which, after reciting the indenture of May 4, 1799, but not mentioning the marriage settlement, B., in exercise of the power given her by the deed of 1799, & of all other powers, etc., appointed the messuages to the use of her husband for life, remainder to the use of herself for life, remainder to the use of the children of the marriage as she should appoint, &, in default of appointment, to all the children equally in tail, with remainder to her husband in fee:—Held: the deed of 1811 did not operate as a revocation of the previous will.—EILBECK v. WOOD (1826), 1 Russ. 564; 5 L. By a codicil he revoked the appointment or charge of £7,000 made by his will, & charged the same hereditaments with the payment of £7,000 to the younger son alone:—Held: though the appointment made by the codicil was invalid, the revocation nevertheless obtained a new one in favour of, such daughter, he undertaking to keep the insurance, in force, & she, on being apprised thereof, acquiesced in the transfer, & agreed to release the insured from the debt:—Held: the transfer was not invalid, as an improper exercise of a power of appointment.—Re KEMP, JOHNSON v. ANCIENT ORDER OF UNITED WORKMEN (1907), 11 O. 3448. —— —— ——.]—Testatrix had under her marriage settlement a testamentary power to appoint the settled funds to all or any of her three sons & six daughters, all of whom attained the age of twenty-one years. By her will she appointed the funds to her six daughters in equal shares absolutely. By a codicil to her will, after reciting the appointment to her daughters & her desire that the share of her daughter M. should not be paid to her but should be held upon the trusts for her benefit thereinafter declared, testatrix revoked the said appointment "in so far (but no farther) as the same" gave to M. an absolute interest therein, & appointed the share which M. "would have been entitled to but for these presents" to trustees upon absolute discretionary trusts for her for life, with a gift over after her death to her sisters which trusts offended the rule against perpetuities & were void :—Held : the share appointed to M. by will was not wholly revoked by the codicil & did not, on failure of the trusts of the codicil, go as in default of appointment under the settlement; but, the trusts of the codicil being void, the original appointment to M. by the will remained operative.—Re BERNARD'S SETTLEMENT, BERNARD v. JONES, [1916] 1 Ch. 552; 85 L. The appointment by codicil was invalid under the power. The invalid appointment was not preceded by any words of revocation referring to the appointment in the will :—Held : the attempted appointment by codicil being wholly bad, & there being no express revocation in the codicil referring to the appointment in the will, the whole of the appointment in the will remained unaffected.—DUGUID v. FRASER (1886), 31 Ch. Part XVI.—Construction.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

3472. Construction matter for court.]—(1) For the purpose of construing a will, the ct. must be informed of the circumstances surrounding the testator when making his will—such as his family status & the nature of his property. Extraneous evidence of these matters is therefore admissible.

(2) The construction of the will is for the ct., & the application of the words of the will to the person or thing described is part of the operative construction (ERLE, C.J.).

(3) In construing a will, alteration of the words cannot be allowed for the purpose of effecting an intention collected only from the extrinsic facts, & opposed to the words as they stand (ERLE, C.J.).

(4) A further argument against the construction which we have adopted was found in the fact that testatrix would thereby be made to die intestate

h. Necessity to construe each case in accordance with its facts.]—No two cases of wills are exactly alike: each must be determined upon its own facts; & a finding of fact in one case is not binding in any other case in which it does not operate as an estoppel.—LLOYD v. ROBERTSON (1916), 35 O. L. R. 264.—CAN.

k. Liberal construction where will not drawn by lawyer.]—Where a will is obviously not drawn by a skilled lawyer the words used may be looked at less strictly than in a case where it is so so far as regards the property in W.; & the fact is so, but the answer is, that we do not find any declaration of an intention that the whole of the property should pass by the will, nor of any intention that the heir-at-law should be entirely disinherited. Indeed, as there is a residuary clause relating to personal property, & no residuary clause relating to real property, the will does not afford any inference against an intention to leave some property undisposed of thereby (ERLE, C.J.).—WEBBER v. STANLEY (1864), 16 C. 3473. Rule of construction—Distinguished from rule of law.]—A rule of construction is one which points out what a ct. shall do in the absence of express or implied intention. A rule of law is one which takes effect when certain conditions are found, although testator may have indicated an intention to the contrary.—Re COWARD, COWARD v. LARKMAN (1887), 57 L. T. 285, C. A.; affd. (1888), 60 L. T. 1, H. L.

3474. Necessity for adherence to rules.]—I agree in the necessity of adhering to general rules in the construction of wills. . . . 3475. ——.]—It would lead to endless confusion & interminable litigation if the cts. were to make or find minute differences in the language of instruments for the purpose of escaping from the authority or apparent authority of previous decisions. With respect to wills in particular, it is far better to have settled rules which will enable the members of families to know what the law gives them, than that every variation of language used by testator, or his lawyer, should entail on family after family the costs, the heartburning & misery of litigation (JAMES, L.J.).—WAKE v. VARAH (1876), 2 Ch. 3510. —— Lunacy of testator after making will.]—Testator by will, dated in 1850, directed all his just debts to be paid out of his personal estate. He then bequeathed to trustees all his household goods, & all his live & dead stock, etc., & all moneys & securities for money, cash at his banker's, & all his freehold, copyhold & leasehold estates, but without general words specifying personal estate, upon trust. He then declared the trusts to be: "As to his household goods, live & dead stock, etc., & all moneys in the house, & cash in his banker's hands, book & other debts," without other general words, upon trust to sell & convert all the aforesaid property, as should not consist of money, & get in the debts, & after payment thereout of his debts pay certain legacies, & equally divide "the remainder of the proceeds of such sale" amongst his two daughters, share & share alike. In June, 1857, testator was found by inquisition to be of unsound mind. At that date he possessed (besides real estate) personal estate of the various kinds described in his will. He had a sum of £2,100 at his banker's. A considerable portion of the personal estate was converted in his lifetime, by the committee under the lunacy, & was partly used in the cultivation, etc., of the farm. Testator died in Aug. 1858:—Held: from what happened under the lunacy, the clearest intention was shown that the will should not speak from the death of testator, but from the date of the will.—WHEELER v. THOMAS (1860), 4 L. On Sept. 16, 1913, E. became a professed nun, & on Mar. 9, 1920, testator died:—Held: having regard to the facts, of which testator was aware, & to the absence of a context limiting the occurrence of the event to the period after testator's death, the word of futurity in the limitation of the gift of income to E. was referable to its occurrence after the execution of the will & not merely to its occurrence after testator's death, & accordingly the gift to E. failed.—Re HEWITT, HEWITT v. HEWITT, [1926] Ch. 740; 95 L. SUB-SECT. 2.—NEW STATUTE INTERVENING BETWEEN WILL AND DEATH.

3516. Effect of statute—On construction of will.] I should have great difficulty indeed in seeing my way to the conclusion that this Act of Parliament either was intended to alter or has in this case had the effect of altering the proper construction of words contained in a will made before the Act passed. . . . I apprehend the construction of the words of a specific gift will be taken generally according to the meaning of the words at the period the will was made (LORD SELBORNE, C.).—JONES v. OGLE (1872), 8 Ch. PART XVI. SECT. 4, SUB-SECT. 2.

3561 i. General rule.]—When testator gives property to one, intending him to have all the rights incident to ownership, & adds to this a gift over of that which remains in specie at his death or at the death of that person, he is endeavouring to do that which is impossible. His intention is plain, but effect cannot be given to it. The ct. has then to endeavour to give such effect to the wishes of testator as is legally possible by ascertaining which part of the testamentary intention predominates & by giving effect to it, rejecting the subordinate intention as being repugnant to the dominant intention.—Re WALKER (1924), 56 O. 3609. ——.]—(1) Testator devised lands to his son H. for life ; & from his decease, to testator's grandson J., eldest son of H., for life ; & on his decease, to the first son of the body of his said grandson J. in tail male, with other remainders over. At the time of making the will, testator's son H. had been twice married ; by his first wife he had one son, S., by his second wife an eldest son, J., & other younger children, sons & daughters :—Held : evidence of the instructions given by testator for his will, & of his declarations, was not admissible to show which of these two grandsons was intended by the description in the will.

(2) The object in all cases is to discover the intention of testator. The first & most obvious mode of doing this is to read his will as he has written it, & collect his intention from his words (LORD ABINGER, C.B.).

(3) All the facts & circumstances respecting persons or property, to which the will relates, are undoubtedly legitimate, & often necessary evidence, to enable us to understand the meaning & application of his words (LORD ABINGER, C.B.).

Sect. 4.—Construction according to intention of testator: Sub-sect. 4. A. (a).]

(4) Testator may have habitually called certain persons or things by peculiar names, by which they were not commonly known. If these names should occur in his will, they could only be explained & construed by the aid of evidence to show the sense in which he used them, in like manner as if his will were written in cypher, or in a foreign language. The habits of testator in these particulars must be receivable as evidence to explain the meaning of his will (LORD ABINGER, C.B.).

But there is another mode of obtaining the intention of testator, which is by evidence of his declarations, of the instructions given for his will, & other circumstances of the like nature, which are not adduced for explaining the words or meaning of the will, but either to supply some deficiency or remove some obscurity, or to give some effect to expressions that are unmeaning or ambiguous. Now, there is but one case in which it appears to us that this sort of evidence of intention can properly be admitted, & that is, where the meaning of testator's words is neither ambiguous nor obscure, & where the devise is on the face of it perfect & intelligible, but, from some of the circumstances admitted in proof, an ambiguity arises, as to which of the two or more things, or which of the two or more persons (each answering the words in the will), testator intended to express (LORD ABINGER, C.B.).—DOE d. 3617. ——.]—(1) Where testator shows upon the face of his will that he must have used technical words in another than their technical sense, there is no rule that prevents us from saying that he may be his own interpreter. So any established course of construction must give way to a contrary intention plainly apparent upon the face of the will. But unless there is something apparent upon the face of the will to the contrary, technical rules & ordinary canons of construction must prevail (LORD CRANWORTH, C.).

(2) The first duty of the ct. expounding the will is to ascertain what is the meaning of the words used by testator. It is very often said that the intention of testator is to be the guide, but that expression is capable of being misunderstood, & may lead to a speculation as to what testator may be supposed to have intended to write, whereas the only & proper inquiry is, what is the meaning of that which he has actually written. That which he has written is to be construed by every part being taken into consideration according to its grammatical construction & the ordinary acceptation of the words used, with the assistance of such parol evidence of the surrounding circumstances as is admissible, to place the ct. in the position of testator (LORD WENSLEYDALE).

(3) Another rule of construction has been referred to . . . that the general intention of testator was to prevail over the particular intention. . . . If accuracy of expression is important, the use of those terms had better be discontinued, though if qualified & understood as explained in [Doe d. Gallini v. Gallini, No. 3704, post] . . . it can make no difference in the result (LORD WENSLEYDALE).—RODDY v. FITZGERALD (1858), 6 H. 3650. ——.]—(1) A mistake clear on the face of a will is legitimate ground of construction.

(2) When testator's intention is manifest in one part of his will & he adopts a clear mode of effecting it, that circumstance may be safely used to throw light on other parts of the will where the intention is doubtful.

(3) A construction which tends to preserve all parts of the will is to be preferred to that which destroys it, especially when the more liberal construction accords with the probable intention of testator.

Ut res magis valeat quam pereat is a rule of common law & common sense ; & much the same principle ought surely to be adopted where the question is, not between two rival constructions of the same words appearing in the same instrument, but where the question is on so ready an instrument as that you may either take it verbally & literally, as it is, or with a somewhat larger & more liberal construction, & by so supplying words as to read it in the way in which you have every reason to believe that the maker of it intended it should stand ; & thus again, according to the rule ut res magis valeat quam pereat, to supply, if you can safely & easily do it, that which he per incuriam omitted, & that which instead of destroying preserves the instrument ; which, instead of putting an end to the instrument & defeating the intention of the maker of it, tends rather to keep alive & continue & give effect to that intention. If this is a rule applicable to all cases, it surely is more peculiarly applicable to a case like the present (LORD BROUGHAM, C.).—LANGSTON v. LANGSTON (1834), 2 Cl. & Fin. 194 ; 8 Bli. N. Here, I think, testator has made his intention clear (LORD MACNAGHTEN).—CRUMPE v. CRUMPE, [1900] A. C. 127; 69 L. J. P. C. 7; 82 L. T. 130, H. L.

3672. ——.]—(1) Where you are construing either a will or any other instrument it is perfectly legitimate to look at the whole instrument &, indeed, you must look at the whole instrument to see the meaning of the whole instrument, & you cannot rely upon one particular passage in it to the exclusion of what is relevant to the explanation of the particular clause that you are expounding (LORD HALSBURY, C.).

(2) It may be that testator may have been imperfectly acquainted with the use of legal language, he may not have understood the legal effect of making a specific gift & what a specific gift was & he may have used language the legal interpretation of which does not carry out the intentions that he had in his mind. . . . Whether that be so or not, of this I am quite clear that that fact should not induce the ct. to put a meaning on his words different from that which the ct. judicially determines to be the meaning which they bear (LORD DAVEY).

(3) In the class of cases in which you cannot tell exactly what is given or to whom it is given because of obscure & doubtful expressions of testator's will in regard to the particular conditions of his property you must have recourse to extrinsic evidence in order to ascertain his meaning. But here, in the first place, the will is in its expressions & language as I think, unambiguous, & that being so, no proof in reference to the amount of testator's estate at the date of the will can affect its construction. It appears to me that the purpose, or the effect at all events, of the proposal to lead evidence in this case is to supply a basis for inferring the intention of testator & to take one away from the true construction of the will as showing that testator intended something different from what he has said. . . . Even if it could be shown that the intention of testator was something different from the language of the will that intention would not prevail but the language of the will must settle the rights of parties (LORD SHAND).—HIGGINS v. DAWSON, [1902] A. 3673. ——.]—If I can read the language of the instrument in its ordinary & natural sense, I do not want any rule of construction; & if I cannot, why then I think one must read the whole instrument as well as one can, & conclude what really its effect is intended to be by looking at the instrument as a whole. I am very reluctant to encourage the suggestion that you may wander from the actual words of a will into the region of conjecture as to what it is reasonable to suppose testator would have done had he contemplated a certain event happening. I protest against the notion that any canon of construction entitles you to indulge your imagination & go into what testator would have said if he had thought of it. . . . Now, in this case I wish to give every effect to the context, & when I look to see if there is anything in the context which controls, cuts down, or explains otherwise than the words themselves do, what is referred to by those words, I can find nothing that entitles me to go beyond the words themselves in the context in which they stand (LORD HALSBURY, C.).

The most that can be said is that if so taken the language leads to results which testator probably did not foresee & specially provide for. I do not think that is sufficient to justify your Lordships in departing from the language he has used (LORD LINDLEY).—INDERWICK v. TATCHELL, [1903] A. C. 120; 72 L. J. Ch. 393; 88 L. T. 399, H. 3685. Original will in foreign language.]—Testator, whose domicil was English, while residing in Nicaragua made his will in the Spanish language, leaving to his wife for life three-fourths of the income derived from the "bonds & moneys" then deposited with a specified bank in London. Upon the death of his wife this same income was to be paid to his sister F., & the income of the other one-fourth was to be equally divided between F. & a brother. No exor. was appointed by testator, & there were no children of the marriage. Testator's widow died on Nov. 15, 1918. On Apr. 27, 1920, letters of administration with the will annexed of testator's estate were obtained by F. from the Probate Registry in England, & a translation of the will into English was registered with it. At the bank in London there were deposited fifteen securities consisting of bonds to bearer, debenture stocks & one sum of inscribed stock. Two of the certificates of debenture stock were not under seal. There was evidence that "bonds" was the correct translation of the Spanish word "bonos" used by testator:—Held: (1) the language of the Spanish will must be looked at to ascertain the equivalent expressions in English; (2) in the absence of sufficient proof of any special local meaning of the Spanish word, the word "bonds" did not include the stocks, the certificates of which were not under seal, & testator died intestate as to these two items of debenture stock as well as to the inscribed stock.—Re MANNERS, MANNERS v. MANNERS, [1923] 1 Ch. 220; 92 L. 3697. ——.]—Although by the doctrine of cy-près or by inplication, as applied to the construction of a will, an estate may be carried otherwise than in the exact form & manner indicated by testator, yet it must always be in favour of a class or part of a class of persons intended to be provided for by testator.

In the first place, it is said that I am to effectuate this intention by means of the doctrine of cy-près. This doctrine, as I understand it, is nothing more than that which prevails in other cases of giving effect to the general intent, but with this difference, that it is not, as in them, carried into effect at the expense of the particular intent. In the common case there is a valid particular intent & there is a valid general intent, & the particular intent not in the view of the ct. effectuating all the intentions which they presume testator to have had, they look to his general intent, & they effect his general intent at the expense of his particular intent. In applying, however, the doctrine of cy-près, nothing is sacrificed; for example, in the case of limitations under powers, where there is a good gift of a limited estate to a person, an object of the power & then a gift over to his children who are not objects of the power, effect may be given to the whole intention by giving to the parent an estate of inheritance by means of which the estate will descend to his children. In such a case, no doubt, the general intent is effectuated, but it is done at no expense of the particular intent, because there is no valid particular intent to which effect can be given. So in the case, more closely applying to that now before the ct., of a limitation to an unborn son for life, with remainder to his unborn children in tail, where, as effect cannot be given to the expressed intention, because successive estates cannot be limited to an unborn person & to his issue, an estate tail is given to the party to whom the limitation was made for life; here, again, the particular intent is not sacrificed, but effect is given to it as a general intent. Supposing, then, that the cy-près doctrine is not to be applied to the case before me, it must be upon this ground & this ground only, that although the doctrine may be applied to cases where the intention of testator is not by such application carried into effect because that intention was illegal, yet it must be so applied in favour of a class intended to be provided for by testator (LORD ST. LEONARDS, C.).—MONYPENNY v. DERING (1852), 2 De G. M. & G. 145; 22 L. J. Ch. 313; 19 L. T. O. S. 320; 17 Jur. 467; 42 E. R. 826, L. C.

3700. ——.]—First of all, there is the doctrine usually called cy-près. It has been said that that doctrine only applies to executory trusts; but that is not so. In the first place, the doctrine is not properly called cy-près at all; it is merely a rule of construction, a rule of construction, that is, by which you sacrifice the particular intent to the general intent, or the subordinate intent to the paramount intent. When you find two intents in a will which are inconsistent with each other, & you therefore cannot carry out both, you give effect to the general or paramount intent. The rule applies just as much to direct devises as to executory trusts, where trustees are directed to convey or do some other act (JESSEL, M.R.).—HAMPTON v. HOLMAN (1877), 5 Ch. D. 183; 46 L. J. 3701. ——.]—Where, on construction, the ct. finds a dominant intention by testator to benefit persons who answer a particular description or class, coupled with a mistake in the enumeration of the persons answering the description or composing the class, the ct. will reject the inaccurate enumeration, whether the actual number in existence at the date of the death is less or more than that specified in the will.

You may either say that testator showed a dominant intention, namely, that of benefiting the persons falling within the particular descriptive words, & a subordinate intention that each of them should take such a fractional interest as would result from the number which he erroneously states to be their accurate number, & that the ct. gives effect to the dominant intention & disregards the subordinate intention; or you may say that if the gift be to three persons defined in a particular way, & there are four such, then inasmuch as it would be impossible to discriminate as between the four & select three of them, because all have equal claim to share, the ct. disregards the erroneous statement of their number so as to escape defeating the gift altogether. In either case the result is that the ct. disregards the figure which testator has erroneously given as measuring the number of persons who fall within the qualification, & says the gift is to have effect in favour of the persons who answer the qualification, notwithstanding that he made a mistake as to their number (BUCKLEY, L.J.).—Re SHARP, MADDISON v. GILL, [1908] 2 Ch. 190; 77 L. F.'s eldest son, B., was born after the death of testator:—Held: the words in the devise previously to "so that" were merely introductory, & the effective gift was in the subsequent words, & consequently B. was given an estate for life only, & did not get an estate in tail under the rule in Shelley's Case, No. 7798, post; but, as B. was born after the death of testator & no estate could be given to his son after his life estate the doctrine of cy-près applied, & under that doctrine B. took an estate in tail male by implication in remainder after his father's estate for life.—Re ELTON, ELTON v. ELTON, [1917] 2 Ch. 413; 87 L. 3704. ——— ———.]—The doctrine that the general intent must overrule the particular intent has been much, & we conceive justly, objected to of late: as being, as a general proposition, incorrect & vague, & likely to lead in its application to erroneous results. In its origin, it was merely descriptive of the operation of the rule in Shelley's Case, No. 7798, post; & it has since been laid down in others, where technical words of limitation have been used, & other words, showing the intention of testator, that the objects of his bounty should take in a different way from that which the law allows, have been rejected; but in the latter cases, the more correct mode of stating the rule of construction is, that technical words, or words of known legal import, must have their legal effect, even though testator uses inconsistent words, unless those inconsistent words are of such a nature as to make it perfectly clear that testator did not mean to use the technical words in their proper sense (DENIHAM, C.J.).—DOE d. (2) When the main purpose & intentions of testator are ascertained to the satisfaction of the ct., if particular expressions are found in the will which are inconsistent with such intention, though not sufficient to control it, or which indicate an intention which the law will not permit to take effect, such expressions must be discarded or modified; &, on the other hand, if the will shows that testator must necessarily have intended an interest to be given which no words in the will expressly devise, the ct. is to supply the defect by implication, & thus to mould the language of testator so as to carry into effect, as far as possible, the intention which, in its opinion, testator has on the whole will sufficiently declared.—TOWNS v. WENTWORTH (1858), 11 Moo. 3717. ——.]—In 1881, on the marriage of M. B., the daughter of W. B., & A. C., a settlement was made which recited that W. B. & A. C. were respectively entitled to certain funds, & that W. B. had transferred from his own funds to the trustees of the settlement a sum of £1,670 Consols, to be held as part of "the trust estate hereby constituted." A. C. & M. B. respectively assigned their own funds to the trustees upon the trusts thereinafter declared. The settlement went on to declare that the trustees should hold "all the trust estate hereby constituted" until the marriage upon trust for the persons to whom the same respectively then belonged, & after the marriage to pay the income of A. C.'s fund to him during the joint lives of A. C. & M. B., & as to the £1,670 Consols & M. B.'s fund to pay the income to M. B. during the same joint lives, & after the death of either A. C. or M. B. to pay the income of "all the trust estate hereby constituted" to the survivor for life, & after the survivor's death upon trust as to corpus for the children of the marriage. If there was no child of the marriage A. C.'s fund was to belong to him, & both the £1,670 Consols & M. B.'s fund if M. B. died in the lifetime of A. C. were to be held in trust for such persons as she should appoint, & in default of appointment to the persons who, if she had died intestate & unmarried, would have been entitled to her personalty under the Statutes of Distribution. There was no declaration of trust of these two later funds in the case of A. C. dying in the lifetime of M. B., & there being no child of the marriage. W. B., in the lifetime of A. C. & M. B., made a will whereby he declared that his trustees should stand possessed of one-fourth of his residuary estate ("hereinafter referred to as M. B.'s share") upon trust to transfer the same to the trustees of her settlement to be held by them upon the trusts of that settlement declared concerning "the fortune brought into settlement by or on behalf of M. B." A. C. died in the lifetime of M. B. & there was no child of their marriage. It was admitted that as regarded the fund which belonged to M. B. & was settled by her there was a resulting trust in her favour:—Held: as regarded the £1,670 Consols there was a resulting trust subject to the life interest of M. B. in favour of W. B., her father; but the fourth share of his residue had been completely severed from W. B.'s estate & given to M. B.'s trustees for her benefit & there was an ultimate trust of this share in favour of M. B.—Re CONNELL'S SETTLEMENT, Re BENETT'S TRUSTS, FAIR v. CONNELL, [1915] 1 Ch. 867; 84 L. J. 3727. —— ——.]—It is urged that . . . it would be most inconvenient to impose upon the ct. the burthen of judging at what time the debts might, or ought, to have been paid. But in answer to this & without denying the inconveniences which exist in this view of the subject, it is certainly a very strong proposition to say, either that a testator has no power to make such a provision, or (which is tantamount to such a declaration) that the ct. will pay no regard to it when made (SIR WM. GRANT, M.R.).—BERNARD v. MOUNTAGUE (1816), 1 Mer. 422; 35 E. R. 729.

3730. —— ——.]—If testator expresses an intention precisely, in clear & positive terms, & there is no legal objection to it, no inconvenience arising from a literal adherence to such intention, so expressed, is to be regarded. The case is very different where the intention is not fully expressed, but is to be collected & inferred as only probable. In that case, the probability, from which the intention is to be inferred, may be outweighed by the improbability, that testator could intend to make a distribution of his property, attended with such inconveniences as would follow from carrying into execution his supposed intention (DAMPIER, J.).—DRIVER d. 3733. —— ——.]—An Englishman, who had resided for many years in India, & become imbued with eastern notions, professing himself, at different times, a believer in the Hindoo & Mahomedan faiths, & to a great degree adopting the habits of life of the latter, by his will (which, with the exception of a small legacy, excluded his brother, his only next of kin, from any benefit), after bequeathing several legacies & specific bequests, gave the residue of his property to the Turkish Ambassador, or the person for the time being representing him, to be applied for the benefit of the poor of the city of Constantinople, & for the erection of a cenotaph at Constantinople, with a light burning, & a description of testator engraved thereon. This will, which was in conformity with his written instructions, was duly executed during the last illness of testator:—Held: as the will was in conformity with the written instructions of the deceased, the true test to ascertain its validity was to look into the previous habits & opinions of testator to account for his extravagant behaviour & language, & though the depositions in the will might be absurd & irrational in a native of England & a Christian, according to English habits, they were accounted for in the case of the testator, who had in early life adopted the manners & mode of living of a Mahomedan.—AUSTEN v. GRAHAM (1854), 8 Moo. P. C. C. 493; 1 Ecc. & Ad. 357; 24 L. T. O. S. 37; 14 E. R. 188, P. C.

Annotation:—Mentd. Davis v. Gregory & Francis (1873), 42 L. J. P. & M. 33.

3734. —— ——.]—It is the privilege of testators to be capricious if they please; . . . dispositions, apparently capricious, may in some cases have their foundation in circumstances unknown to the ct., but which might be sufficient, at all events in the opinion of testator, to render the disposition reasonable. In cases of this nature, therefore, the ct. must be guided by the words of the will; but it must look to the whole will, so far as it bears upon the subject, & not merely to any particular expression contained in it; & it must, as in other cases, be careful that the particular expressions of the will are applied only to the subjects to which they were intended to refer (TURNER, L.J.).—BOOSEY v. GARDENER (1854), 5 De G. M. & G. 122; 18 Beav. 471; 43 E. R. 816, L. JJ.

Annotation:—Consd. Paylar v. Pegg (1857), 24 Beav. 105.

3735. —— ——.]—(1) The only reason, therefore, for proposing to put a different interpretation on the language used, is the persuasion that the intention expressed by the words does not truly convey the meaning of testator using them, that he meant to say something different from that which he has said. But this is not a legitimate ground for adopting a forced construction, or for interpolating words, unless the instrument itself enables us to do so (LORD CRANWORTH).

(2) Where by acting on one interpretation of the words used we are driven to the conclusion, that the person using them is acting capriciously, without any intelligible motive, contrary to the ordinary mode in which men in general act in similar cases, there, if the language admits of two constructions, we may reasonably & properly adopt that which avoids these anomalies, even though the construction adopted is not the most obvious, or the most grammatically accurate. But if the words used are unambiguous, they cannot be departed from merely because they lead to consequences which we consider capricious, or even harsh & unreasonable (LORD CRANWORTH).

(3) In a will we have nothing to guide us but the language of testator. In marriage articles, cts. have always felt warranted in saying, that such a construction must be put on them as will accomplish their object, namely, the securing a provision for the children. They must, in general, be read as if there was a recital in them, "Whereas the object of the parties is to secure a provision for the children of the now intended marriage" (LORD CRANWORTH).

(4) The will must be expressed in writing, & that writing only is to be considered. In construing that writing the rule is to read it in the ordinary & grammatical sense of the words, unless some obvious absurdity, or some repugnance or inconsistency with the declared intentions of the writer, to be extracted from the whole instrument, should follow from so reading it. Then the sense may be modified, extended or abridged, so as to avoid those consequences, but no farther (LORD WENSLEYDALE).—ABBOTT v. MIDDLETON, RICKETTS v. CARPENTER (1858), 7 H. L. In the construction of this will there is, no doubt, a great temptation to swerve from the rule of construction laid down by the House of Lords in the case of Abbott v. Middleton, No. 3735, ante, that you must adhere to the words of testator unless some inconsistency would result from doing so, but that rule is of so much importance that it ought not to be departed from on slight grounds, nor even upon the ground of strong probability that testator meant something different from what he had actually said (WOOD, L.J.).—NUNN v. HANCOCK (1868), 16 W. There was a gift over, in case either of the daughters should die "without leaving any lawful issue or other lineal descendants her surviving," to the other daughter & her child or children or other lineal descendants. In case both of the daughters should die "without leaving any lawful issue or other lineal descendants her or them surviving," there was a gift over to other persons:—Held: children of a daughter who predeceased her did not take.

I fully admit that on the authorities & on the reason of the thing, if that stood alone followed by an immediate gift to children, though it might appear to be & would be a very capricious intention, because it would make the interests of the children, if they all died in their parents' lifetime, depend on whether one of them had left a grandchild who would not take anything, still, there being no other words, that would not be sufficient to make the interests of the children contingent on their surviving their parents. It would be a remarkably capricious intention, having the interests of the children dependent upon an extraneous fact, but still it would not be an impossible intention (JESSEL, M.R.).

(2) I take it that no rule of construction is better settled than that, when two meanings are open to a judge, & the one is reasonable & sensible, & the other, though not absolutely unreasonable in the sense of supposing that the testator must have been a lunatic, yet is extremely unlikely, he ought to select that meaning which is consonant to ordinary reason, & not liable to the imputation of excessive caprice (JESSEL, M.R.).—SELBY v. WHITTAKER (1877), 6 Ch. That would seem to be a very strange construction, & one that we ought not to adopt, if the words can have any other other meaning (LORD CRANWORTH).—VICKERS v. POUND (1858), 6 H. L. Cas. 885; 28 L. 3753. ——.]—(1) I quite agree to that rule, when properly understood & rightly applied, but that rule means that words are to be taken in their plain ordinary sense with reference to the subject-matter in the instrument to be construed. Taking hold of a particular word, & giving it the meaning which it most often bears, will lead into great mistakes, if we do not remember that the rule must refer to the meaning it bears with reference to the subject-matter (LORD CRANWORTH).

(2) I think there is no weight in the argument that the natural & ordinary meaning of the word "eldest" is eldest in point of age, & that it is unjustifiable to substitute such a meaning as a conveyancer or other lawyer whose mind is habituated to established rules of descent & conventional limitations of real property would be lead to adopt. The will is confessedly not the natural language of testator himself, but the professional language of the conveyancer who was employed to draw it. Surely it is difficult to maintain that in construing such a will the same sense ought to be imputed to its language as if the subject of construction were a document of an ordinary kind, framed in natural language, & treating of untechnical matters (LORD CRANWORTH).

(3) Reading the will, therefore, with no other inclination as to its construction except that which naturally & properly arises from an unwillingness to attribute unreasonable or capricious intentions to testator, when his language permits us to regard him as reasonable & not capricious, I think it clear, that if the words "eldest male lineal descendant" can, without violence, be taken to indicate the person who should at the specified time be heir male of the body of I., we are bound so to construe them (LORD CRANWORTH).—THELLUSSON v. RENDLESHAM (LORD), THELLUSSON v. THELLUSSON, HARE v. ROBARTS (1859), 7 H. 3761. ——.]—The rule in favour of putting on a settlement or will making a provision for a family such a construction as will give the children indefeasible interests on their attaining twenty-one, is only a rule of construction to be applied in construing ambiguous words, & not a positive rule which will modify the effect of plain words.

If testator makes in clear terms an unreasonable disposition we cannot help it, & we cannot make a will for him. All rules of construction are simply rules to be applied where there is no definite expression of intention in the instrument. If there is, you do not want any rule of construction. Even when it has been laid down as a rule that certain words have a particular meaning, still, if there is any expression in the will which shows that testator intended to use them in a different sense, we must give them the meaning which he has shown that he intended them to bear. Rules of construction are only intended to aid us where there is ambiguity, & not to enable us to get rid of the express words of testator if expressed in clear language (COTTON, L.J.).—Re HAMLET, STEPHEN v. CUNNINGHAM (1888), 39 Ch. 3781. ——.]—Our duty is to ascertain not what testator may be supposed to have intended, but the meaning of the words he has used, & these we must construe according to their ordinary & grammatical sense, unless some obvious absurdity, or some repugnance or inconsistency with the declared intentions of the writer, to be collected from the whole instrument, followed from it, or, it may be added, some inconsistency with the subject on which the will is meant to operate, & then the sense might be modified so as to avoid those consequences, but no farther. . . . Doubtless we are bound by decided cases for the sake of obtaining as much certainty in the administration of the law as the subject is capable of. But when the decision is not upon some rule or principle of law, but upon the meaning of words in instruments which differ so much from each other, & when the proper construction is so varied by the particular circumstances in each case, it seldom happens that the words of one will form any guide for the construction of words resembling them in another (LORD WENSLEYDALE).

It is a familiar rule of construction, that in interpreting wills the import of particular expressions may be restricted or enlarged by the context of the instrument, & that a ct. of justice must read the language used in the sense in which it appears that testator used it. For this purpose the ct. is not only authorised, but is bound to place itself as far as possible in the situation of testator when the will was made, & to expound the bequests which are contained in it by the light afforded by the surrounding circumstances (LORD KINGSDOWN).—SLINGSBY v. GRAINGER (1859), 7 H. The whole complexion of a will ought to be considered.

Now, although the word estate may, in common speech, not mean an inheritance; yet it is clear he has meant it so here; & then taking it in that proper legal sense it will be a complete disposition of the whole: whereas, taking it to carry but an estate for life, there will be a chasm, an incomplete disposition; since half must descend to this very Thomas, & the other half to the other co-heirs, as hath been before observed (LORD TALBOT, C.).—IBBETSON v. BECKWITH (1735), Cas. temp. Talb. 157; 25 E. As regards all the estates by the will devised to testator's nephews born after his decease, such a construction would have the singular effect . . . of making them all void; for, by cutting out four years of their interest after attaining twenty-one, it would bring the limitations to testator's unborn nephews within the rule against perpetuities, by which the whole of such limitations would be void (PAGE-WOOD, V.-C.).—GOSLING v. GOSLING (1859), John. 265; 5 Jur. 3815. ——.]—Testator devised his real estate to trustees, upon trust to settle it upon A. for life, with remainder to his children in strict settlement, with remainder to B. for life, with remainders over. The settlement was to contain a name & arms clause, which would make the estate shift from the person failing to comply to the next remainderman in esse, but without prejudice to prior contingent estates. It was also to contain a clause which, in an event which happened, would make the estate go to such uses as the same would have gone to if the limitations in favour of A. had not been inserted. A. had no children:—Held: the whole will was inconsistent with an intention to die partially intestate, & B. was entitled to the rents of the estate during his life, or until A. should have a child, to the exclusion of the heir-at-law.—D'EYNCOURT v. GREGORY (1864), 34 Beav. 36; 3 New Rep. 628; 10 L. 3816. ——.]—Testator, having two sons & five daughters, by his will directed the residue of his real & personal estates to be divided, as a mixed fund, into sevenths, & bequeathed one-seventh to one son, & another to the other son. He then bequeathed "the remaining five-sevenths" upon trust during the respective lives of his daughters, E., S., Z., M., & H., to invest & pay the income into the proper & respective hands of his said daughters, again naming them, in equal shares for their separate use. He then, from & after the death of E., gave one-fifth of the fund to the children of E.; & from & after the death of S., another fifth to the children of S.; from & after the death of Z., another fifth to the children, not of Z., but of M.; & from & after the death of H., another fifth to the children of H. He further gave directions, until the "part or share of the said trust moneys of the issue of any of my said daughters" should become payable, to apply the same by way of maintenance. The ct., holding that a clause, giving to the children of Z. an interest in one-fifth of the trust fund similar to that which was given to the children of the other four daughters, & giving the children of M. a like interest on the death not of Z. but of M., had been accidentally omitted, declared that the will must be read as if it contained the omitted clause.

Now, no doubt the mere letter of the will, or any other instrument, is not to be adhered to if a contrary signification can be suggested by the whole context of the instrument. The spirit is to prevail, & the letter is not to be allowed to kill. That I take to be a plain, clear canon of construction. There is the other rule which the ct. always acts upon, namely, not to impute to testator the intention of dying intestate. . . . There is not any case that can be referred to, that I know of, in which the mere letter has been allowed to prevail over the plain sense of the instrument (BACON, V.-C.).—Re REDFERN, REDFERN v. BRYNING (1877), 6 Ch. 3820. ——.]—(1) The first rule is this: if all the terms of description fit some particular property, you cannot enlarge them by extrinsic evidence, so as to include anything which any part of those terms does not accurately fit. That is the first rule, but then the second rule is: if the words of description when examined do not fit with accuracy, & if there must be some modification of some part of them in order to place a sensible construction on the will, then the whole thing must be looked at fairly in order to see what are the leading words of description, & what is the subordinate matter, & for this purpose evidence of extrinsic facts may be regarded (CHITTY, J.).

(2) In the first place there was a residuary devise, & as has often been pointed out, & as the Ct. of Appeal has lately appointed out in Re Harrison, Turner v. Hellard, No. 3684, ante, it is a matter of some importance in construing a will to see whether the construction which is offered does or does not result in an intestacy. The present Master of the Rolls has expressed his opinion in regard to that point, speaking of it as a golden rule, that you ought, if possible, to read the will so as to lead to a testacy & not to an intestacy (CHITTY, J.).—Re BRIGHT-SMITH, BRIGHT-SMITH v. BRIGHT-SMITH (1886), 31 Ch. 3821. ——.]—The first question is as to the interest taken by the wife; does she take a life interest determinable on remarriage in one-ninth only of the residue, or in the whole? We think in the whole, & that there would be great difficulty in giving any other construction to the words, for we cannot think that testator intended to create a class of whom his widow would be one, & unless you read the clause as creating a joint tenancy, which would be impossible if the wife takes a life interest while the children take absolutely, there is an intestacy as to the wife's share after her death (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.).—Re MORSE, MORSE v. MORSE (1902), 46 Sol. Jo. 280, C. A.

3824. Conflict between gifts in same will—Whether presumption applicable.]—I get no assistance from the usual extrinsic circumstances, or from putting myself in his arm chair, because unfortunately the subject-matter on this particular dispute was not in existence at the time that he made his will. Nor is there assistance to be derived from the inclination of the ct. to avoid intestacy, because it is not a case between testacy & intestacy, but between two gifts in the same will. Nor is there any assistance to be derived from the man's natural desire to provide for persons having a claim on him as compared with strangers, because it is a case between the children of his brother, the daughters & the sons (FARWELL, J.).—Re PRICE, PRICE v. NEWTON, [1905] 2 Ch. 55; 74 L. Two of the thirteen named persons died in testator's lifetime without leaving children:—Held: there was an intestacy as to these two shares of income down to the period of distribution.

If testator had been asked what his wishes were in the possible event which has now actually happened he would probably have said that the income had better go to the survivors or the children of those who were then dead; but he has not in fact said so, & it is not right to consider the question from the point of view of whether testator did or did not contemplate an intestacy. The question is whether, on a reasonable construction of the will, he has in the event which has happened avoided an intestacy by giving a property, which otherwise would be undisposed of, to some other legatee. He has not done so, &, although it would be a rational thing, & one of which testator would, if he had been alive, have probably approved, in my opinion it would be a bad precedent, & one which I am not justified in making, to draw any such implication as I am asked to draw in the present case (PARKER, J.).—Re HOBSON, BARWICK v. HOLT, [1912] 1 Ch. 626; 106 L. 3845. ——.]—Testator gave the residue of his estates to trustees, in trust to pay the income to each of his seven children for life, & after the decease of each of his children in trust to distribute the capital of each deceased child's share among his or her children ; & in case any of his children should die without issue living at his or her death, then to divide the interest & capital of such child so dying equally amongst the survivors or survivor of the testator's said seven children, or the issue of such of them as should be then dead, in manner by the will before directed concerning the original shares. The will contained a clause against the alienation of any share. Of the seven children who survived testator, two died leaving children, & A. & B., two other of the children, successively died without issue :—Held : the share which accrued to B. on A.'s death followed B.'s original share, & passed to the surviving children of testator & the issue of the two children who had died leaving issue.

3849. —— Gift impossible of rational interpretation.]—By a settlement made on Aug. 13, 1862, testator covenanted to pay certain sums to trustees, & declared trusts of the same in favour of his daughter A. & her husband & children, & directed that if there should be no child who should attain a vested interest, the trustees, after the death of A. & such failure of children, should stand possessed of the trust premises in trust for testator, his exors., administrators, & assigns, for his & their absolute benefit. By his will made in 1875 testator devised & bequeathed his residuary real & personal estate to trustees upon trust for conversion, & to stand possessed of an undivided moiety of the clear residue of his estate & the proceeds of sale thereof to such & the same or like uses, trust, intents, & purposes & subject to such & the same like powers, provisoes, " & with the like remainders over," as were declared in favour of his daughter A. & her children by the indenture of Aug. 13, 1862 ; & as to the other moiety for similar uses, intents, & purposes in favour of another daughter, L. & her children. Testator died in 1880, & his daughter A. in 1915 a widow & without ever having had any issue :—Held : it was impossible to say what testator meant by the irrational gift in remainder, &, in the events which had happened, he died intestate as to the capital of this moiety of his residuary estate.—Re POWELL, BODVEL-ROBERTS v. POOLE, [1918] 1 Ch. 407 ; 87 L. The daughter had two children, one, who died in her lifetime, aged twenty-seven years; & another, who survived her, & attained the age of thirty years:—Held: the word "vested" was used in the sense of "not subject to be divested" or "indefeasible"; & the bequest of the £1,000, after the decease of the daughter, to her child & children, was a valid bequest creating a vested interest in the children who survived her, & the representatives of the child who died in her lifetime; & the gift over only was void for remoteness.—TAYLOR v. FROBISHER (1852), 5 De G. & Sm. 191; 21 L. In the event of the death of any one or more of them, the said H. R., P., T., & A., without leaving issue, she directed that the share or shares of him, her, or them so dying should be in trust for the survivor or survivors of them, & the income & capital be paid & divided in the same manner as was directed as to the original shares. She then directed that none of the said shares should be "so paid to or become vested interests in" any of the said children of the said H., R., P., T., & A., until he, she, & they attained the age of twenty-five respectively; & that in the meantime it should be lawful for the trustees to pay any part of the income from "such shares respectively towards the maintenance & education of such children respectively." The will then contained a proviso, which was admitted to be void for remoteness, that if any of the said children of the said H., R., P., T., & A. should die before attaining twenty-five, the shares or share of him, her, or them so dying should accrue to the survivors & survivor. Testatrix then declared that, in case of the death of any other of the said children "before such accruing or surviving shares shall become vested as aforesaid," every such accruing or surviving share should again be subject to the same condition of accruer: provided nevertheless that, in case any of such child or children should have left issue, such issue should take such share in the trust funds as his, her, or their deceased parent or parents would have had "if living": & such share or shares "to be paid to" such issue at such age or time as thereinbefore was directed with respect to the payment of their parents' original shares:—Held: the word "vested" must be construed as meaning "indefeasible"; & the remainders to the children of H., R., P., T., & A. vested in such of the children as were alive at the death of testatrix, or were born afterwards.—Re EDMONDSON'S ESTATE (1868), L. The daughter survived testatrix, attained twenty-five, & in 1812 married with the necessary consent. 3861. —— ——.]—The rule which has always been applied to cases of remoteness is this : You do not import the law of remoteness into the construction of the instrument, by which you investigate the expressed intention of testator. You take his words, & endeavour to arrive at their meaning, exactly in the same manner as if there had been no such law, & as if the whole intention expressed by the words could lawfully take effect. I do not mean that, in dealing with words which are obscure & ambiguous, weight, even in a question of remoteness, may not sometimes be given to the consideration that it is better to effectuate than to destroy the intention ; but I do say, that, if the construction of the words is one about which a ct. would have no doubt, though there was no law of remoteness, that construction cannot be altered, or wrested to something different, for the purpose of escaping from the consequences of that law (LORD SELBORNE, C.).—PEARKS v. MOSELEY (1880), 5 App. Cas. 714 ; 50 L. C. Family of Testator.

3892. Presumption in favour of children.]—A married woman, by a testamentary instrument made in execution of a power contained in her marriage settlement, gave £2,000, subject to the life interest of her husband, to trustees upon trust for the benefit of her child or children, to be equally divided between them, share & share alike; but in case the £2,000 should become payable before her children, being sons, should have attained, twenty-one, or, being daughters, should have attained that age or day of marriage, then in trust to invest & apply the interest to their maintenance & education, & when they should attain twenty-one or day of marriage, to pay to them their respective shares of the principal; & in case any of the children should happen to die before their portions should become payable, then the same should go & belong to the survivors or survivor of them. Testatrix left a son & two daughters, all of whom had attained twenty-one at her decease. The son, & afterwards a daughter, died in the lifetime of their father:—Held: on the death of the father, the surviving daughter was entitled to the £2,000 by survivorship, except as to that share of it which accrued to the deceased daughter upon the death of the son, which belonged to the representative of the deceased daughter.

The rule being that, when testator has unequivocally expressed an intention that a provision to be made for his children shall depend upon their surviving both their parents, the ct. must give effect to that intention, & can only lean to the presumption in favour of children, where the intention of testator is ambiguously expressed (LEACH, M.R.).—BRIGHT v. ROWE (1834), 3 My. & K. 316; 40 E. The circumstances of this case fully justify me in applying the principle, originally founded on marriage settlements, that the ct. will favour a plain intention to provide for children, where the contest is between surviving children & the representatives of deceased children (WOOD, V.-C.).—WHITE v. HILL (1867), L. 3897. ——.]—The ct. has pushed some of its conclusions to an extreme length for the purpose of including as many children as possible, first upon settlements, on the ground that a settlement is itself an indication of all children being intended to be provided for; & then in wills, it has followed the same rule, where a father is providing for his children, or where any person, who has placed himself in loco parentis, is providing for the family. In such cases, if there is a single link wanting in the chain of referential words connecting & identifying the children who are being spoken of with those comprised in a description requiring them to survive a given period, the ct. will take advantage of this to let in all the children, whether they survive that period or not (LORD HATHERLEY, C.).—WILLIAMS v. HAYTHORNE, WILLIAMS v. WILLIAMS (1871), 6 Ch. The word " heir," which he has used, imports, in some sense or other, the right of legal succession; & he has at the same time so expressed himself as to show that he did not intend the order of legal succession; & under these circumstances it appears to me that the persons intended to take . . . are wholly uncertain & the legacy belongs to the next of kin under the statute (LORD LANG-

3910. Presumption in favour of nearer relative—Bequest to children of one nephew & another nephew.]—Testatrix directed one moiety of the proceeds of sale of her real estate "to be equally divided between the children of F. W. & J. W. or their heirs." F. W. & J. W. were nephews of testatrix. F. W. had six children living at the death of testatrix. For five years previous to the date of the will he had not lived with his family. J. W. had two children living at the death of testatrix:—Held: the gift was to J. W. & the children of F. W. & the division must be into moieties, one going to J. W. & the other to the children of F. W.

Considering the nature of the gift, it would be strange, not to say capricious, to make a class of one nephew & the children of another & divide among them in equal shares (JOYCE, J.).—Re WALBRAN, MILNER v. WALBRAN, [1906] 1 Ch. 64; 93 L. T. 745; 54 W. R. 167.

3981. ——.]—(1) Our law gives full liberty of testamentary disposition, & testators avail themselves of this liberty to the full. Courts are therefore venturing on dangerous ground when they leave the actual wording of the document & permit themselves to speculate on what is a probable disposition in a will. It is of course possible that some disposition in a will may be so inconsistent with the rest of the will, or with the surrounding circumstances at the date of the will, that the ct. may be led to hold that there is in its expression an error, either in the nature of a clerical mistake, or of the use of a word or expression in an improper & non-natural sense. Where it is a question of choice between two possible interpretations, one of which would have the preference in the absence of indications to the contrary, such considerations may ultimately turn the scale in favour of the other. But where the normal meaning of the words offers no difficulty it is in my opinion not legitimate to allow the probability of a particular disposition to affect the mind of the ct. unless perhaps in a case so extreme that the language of the disposition, as it would ordinarily be interpreted, makes it of so extravagant & fantastic a nature that the ct. is forced to conclude, as it might be forced to do in the case of any other document, that the true intention of testator is not represented by the ordinary interpretation of the language he has used (FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J.).

(2) There is no presumption that each word used should change the meaning of the sentence. A word may be inserted for the sake of emphasis or for greater clearness, or descriptively, or because it occurs to the writer as suitable to the idea he is expressing, & this without any thought whether it is or is not absolutely necessary to the expression of his meaning. The objection to an interpretation on the ground that it would make a word or phrase surplusage has weight only when the presence of such word or phrase would be unusual or unaccountable if it were not specially inserted for the purpose of altering the meaning of the sentence. The mere fact that you could omit it without change of meaning has in itself no weight. There is no presumption that human beings use the irreducible minimum of words to effect their purpose (FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J.).—Re BODEN, BODEN v. BODEN, [1907] 1 Ch. 132; 76 L. J. 3984. Different meaning apparent from extrinsic circumstances.]—(1) Where the words of a will have a primary & common sense meaning, they must be taken to have been used in that sense, unless the contrary appears from the context, or from extrinsic circumstances.

(2) It may happen, although a will is unambiguous on the face of it, yet that extrinsic circumstances may show that you are to give the words a meaning different from what they apparently signify; as, for instance, where testator gives all his property to the children of a particular individual, & there are no children but grandchildren, in such a case the term children will be construed to include descendants (LORD CRANWORTH, C.).

PART XVI. SECT. 10, SUB-SECT. 2.—B. (b) iii.

4015 i. General rule.]—The general rule of construction in almost all questions arising upon wills is first to ascertain by an examination of the entire will what is the natural & grammatical meaning of the language used by testator, subject to this, that if the law places a certain signification upon the words he has used they must, in the absence of a controlling context, be construed in that sense, no matter how he may possibly have meant them to be understood; & having thus arrived at the meaning of the words, they must be so applied, unless so to do would lead to some palpable absurdity or violate some rule of law.—PALMER v. ORPEN, [1894] 1 I. 4028. ——.]—Testator directed his property to be settled upon his daughter H. in such manner that in case of her death it should devolve upon her children, if she had any ; & if she should not have any, then that she should bequeath it to any person she might think fit : the word devolve imports transmission to children living at the death of the mother ; & upon the death of the mother, her husband, as representative of a deceased child, took no interest under the will.

The intention of testator is perfectly clear ; & there is no rule of law which prevents the will from receiving that construction which the language of testator naturally imports. . . . To devolve means to pass from a person dying to a person living ; the etymology of the word shows its meaning (LEACH, M.R.).—PARR v. PARR (1833), 1 My. & K. 647 ; 2 L. J. Ch. 167 ; 39 E. R. 826.

4031. ——.]—There is one rule of construction, of universal application, which admits of no exception, & which ought never, under any circumstances, to be departed from, viz., that if any term is used by testator which has a primary or ordinary legal meaning, that is the sense in which it ought to be construed, unless the ct. is reasonably satisfied, by evidence to be collected from the will itself, of testator's intention to use it, not in that sense, but in some different sense. It follows, from this rule, that in every case in which a question is raised as to the meaning to be attributed to any particular term used by testator, the first thing to be done is to ascertain & fix its primary or ordinary legal meaning, & when that is ascertained, the onus lies on the party who insists on attributing to it a different meaning, to point out the evidence (if any) which the will furnishes, to show testator's intention to use the term in such different sense, & not according to its ordinary acceptation (KINDERSLEY, V.-C.).—Re CRAWFORD'S TRUSTS (1854) 2 Drew. 230 ; 2 Eq. When you can give effect to every word, attributing to each expression its proper legal signification, & the result, though perhaps unexpected or unusual, is not irrational or absurd, I do not think you ought to approach the construction of the will with the idea that testator probably did not mean what he has said (LORD MACNAGHTEN).—VAN GRUTTEN v. FOXWELL, FOXWELL v. VAN GRUTTEN, [1897] A. 4054. —— ——.]—Where a word has two proper & recognised meanings LORD WENSLEYDALE'S canon of construction [in Grey v. Pearson, No. 3502, ante] must be greatly modified, even if it applies at all. He does not mean to lay down that we must take the etymologically correct meaning of a word or that meaning which statistically or numerically is the most common unless to do otherwise would lead to an absurdity or inconsistency. The meaning of words is fixed by user alone, & where the user of a word in more than one sense is established, the question in which sense it is used in a particular passage must be decided by the context & the surrounding circumstances, & no one meaning can be treated as having such paramount claims that it is to be adopted in preference to any other, unless its adoption would lead to an absurdity or inconsistency (FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J.).—CAVE v. HORSELL, [1912] 3 K. E. Particular Words

(a) "Entitled."

4055. How construed.]—The words "entitled to an estate for life" held to mean entitled in possession.

Testator devised to pltf. a life interest in remainder in the T. estate, & he also bequeathed to him a charge of £250 issuing out of it, which was to be paid to him at twenty-one. The will contained a proviso, that in case pltf. should "become entitled, under the provisions of the will, to an estate or interest for his life" in the T. estate, the legacy should sink into the estate:—Held: this meant "entitled in possession, & have the beneficial enjoyment of the estate."—CHORLEY v. LOVEBAND (1863), 33 Beav. 189; 9 L. T. 596; 12 W. R. 187; 55 E. R. 339.

4056. ——.]—By a codicil testator declared that £1,000, part of the sum of £2,000, should be held for the absolute use & benefit of his son H., but if he should be dead when the said sum of £1,000 should "descend & come" to him under the trusts therein contained, then that the same should be paid to all the children of H. "except the one entitled to any real property upon his father's decease," share & share alike. Upon the death of H., in 1862, after testator's death, his eldest son became next tenant for life in remainder of the settled estates, expectant on the death without issue of the then tenant for life in possession, which happened in 1863. The surviving tenant for life of the legacy died in 1867:—Held: the eldest son of H. was excluded from participation in the £1,000.—Re GRYLLS' TRUSTS (1868), L. R. 6 Eq. 589.

Annotation:—Refd. Harris v. Newton (1877), 46 L. J. Ch. 268.

4057. ——.]—Testator devised real estate to & to the use of trustees & their heirs in trust for his nephew W., son of his brother E., & his other sons in tail male, remainder to the first & other sons of his testator's brother A.; remainder to the first & other sons of his, testator's, brother S.; remainder to the second & other sons of his, testator's, brother E. in tail male; with remainder over. He empowered his trustees during the minority of any infant tenants in tail, "or other persons for the time being entitled" under the trusts, to grant leases; & also during the minority of any tenant for life, in tail, or in fee, "entitled to the present possession" of the estates, to manage the estates, & accumulate the surplus towards maintenance & education. Testator then bequeathed his residuary personalty to the trustees upon trust to pay & transfer the same unto and equally amongst all his nephews & nieces living at his decease except W., "or other the person or persons entitled" to the estates. At the time of testator's death W. was dead, an infant & never married; A. & S. were living, & the second son of E. was living, an infant. Testator left four nephews & nieces, besides the second son of E. S. had since died, not having been married; the second son of E. had attained twenty-one. A. was living, aged sixty-eight, & not married:—Held: the second son of E., being tenant in tail expectant on the failure of sons of his uncle A., was not "entitled" to the real estates within the meaning of the will; & was not excluded from participating in the personal estate.—UMBERS v. JAGGARD (1870), L. should within two years after becoming so entitled assume testator's name & arms, & that, in case of refusal or neglect, then after the expiration of such two years his interest should be void & go over. W.'s son had not assumed testator's name & arms:—Held: "entitled," meant "entitled in possession."—Re FINCH, ABBISS v. BURNEY (1880), 17 Ch. D. 211; 43 L. T. 20; 28 W. 4059. ——.]—Testatrix by her will dated Nov. 19, 1850, devised real estate to trustees upon trust to receive the rents & profits & pay them to her daughter for life & after her death to pay the rents & profits to the children of the daughter until the youngest attained twenty-one, & then to convey to the children as tenants in common. But in the event, which happened, of there being no child of the daughter who attained twenty-one, testatrix directed that the trustees or trustee of the will for the time being should convey & assure the same to her three brothers A., B., & C. as tenants in common. "But in case all or either of my said brothers shall depart this life before they or he become entitled as aforesaid, the trustees or trustee for the time being of my will shall convey & assure the share or shares of them or him so dying, to my nieces as tenants in common." The daughter died in 1910, A. died in 1861, B. in 1885, & C. in 1887. A. had two daughters, & B. three. For the representatives of A., B., & C. it was contended that they "became entitled" to a vested interest at the death of testatrix:—Held: the context showed that "entitled as aforesaid" meant entitled to have the property conveyed to them, & in the events that happened the property passed to the nieces & not to the representatives of the brothers.—Re WHITER, WINDSOR v. JONES (1911), 105 L. 4061. Whether restricted to bequest of personal property.]—Though the word "legacy" be usually taken for the bequest of a personal thing & on the contrary a gift of land by will be commonly & more properly called a devise, yet the word legacy may, in an extensive sense, be understood to comprehend any kind of estate, real as well as personal, left by testator's will to any person (LORD MACCLESFIELD, C.).—BECKLEY v. NEWLAND (1723), 2 P. The word "devise" did not occur in the will, though the word "pay" did:—Held: the idea of totality conveyed by the word "all" outweighed, not only the omission of the word "devise" but also the expressions which seemed to negative the inclusion of real estate, & consequently testator's realty passed under the gift.—Re SHEPHERD, MITCHELL v. LORAM (1914), 58 Sol. legacies & an annuity, & directed two sums of money to be set apart sufficient to produce two other specified annual sums, which testatrix bequeathed to two specified persons for their respective lives. She gave to trustees the residue of her personal estate, subject to the payment of her debts, funeral & testamentary expenses, & the legacies & annuities which she had bequeathed or might thereafter bequeath by any codicil, & she devised her real estates to trustees for a term, upon trust to raise sufficient to pay her debts, legacies, & funeral & testamentary expenses, but directed that her personal estate should be the primary & the term the secondary fund for payment of her debts, legacies, & funeral & testamentary expenses :—Held : the separate specification of "annuities" in some parts of the will did not prevent annuities from being comprehended under the expression "legacies" in the trusts of the term.—HEATH v. WESTON (1853), 3 De G. (c) "Minority."

4076. How construed — Under twenty-five.]—Devise to A., an infant, for life, & his first & other sons in strict settlement ; with remainders for similar estates. The will farther directed "during the minority of the A. family," an accumulation of the rents to be laid out in a purchase, "until the minor arrives at the full age of twenty-five years," & then "the heir to take full possession of this estate." A. being residuary legatee is entitled absolutely to the accumulation.—BINGLEY v. BROADHEAD (1803), 8 Ves. 415 ; 32 E. R. 416.

4077. —— ——.]—Testator left all his real & personal property to trustees, to pay the interest to his daughter, for life, & after her death to pay the same towards the maintenance & education of such children as she should have, during their minority, & when the youngest should attain twenty-five, to divide the same equally between them ; but in case either of his daughter's children should die, leaving any children, who should attain twenty-one, then to pay their shares to their children ; & after these trusts should be carried into execution, then the trustees were directed to convey, release, & assign all the freehold & leasehold estates to the heir or heirs, who should be legally entitled to the same ; & in case testator's daughter should leave no children, or they should die under age, & unmarried, then to pay & assign the interest, & rents & profits, to his next of kin :—Held : "minority" meant twenty-five, as distinguished from coming of age.—MILROY v. MILROY (1844), 14 Sim. 48 ; 13 L. 4078. —— Under twenty-one.]—As regards the second argument on the part of defts., viz. that, according to the true construction of the codicil, the word "minority" must mean the period during which testator has kept both his children out of the full control over their property, the only case cited, that of Milroy v. Milroy, No. 4077, ante, was decided upon the whole frame & scope of the will. If the whole tenor of the will be such as clearly indicates that the word "minority" is used in such a sense, the ct. can let testator be the expounder of his own words. He frames his own vocabulary ; & if he uses the word in that sense, the ct. is at liberty to adopt it. But in this case, I find testator making a careful separation between the period of minority & that of full age. In one case I find him providing for the maintenance & education of his children "during their minority, or the minority of either of them." In another, that the allowance for pocket-money shall continue "during their minority, or until such division of the property is made," as he had before described ; &, looking to these circumstances, I do not feel at liberty to give to the word "minority," when it occurs in the codicil, any other than its strict interpretation, viz. "under twenty-one years of age" (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—MADDISON v. CHAPMAN (1858), 4 K. & J. 709 ; 70 E. R. 294 ; on appeal (1859), 3 De G. & J. 536, L. C. & L. JJ.

(d) "Unmarried."

4080. How construed—Flexible in meaning.]—A married woman, by her will, bequeathed her separate property, upon trusts for the benefit of her son & daughter, & their children ; &, in case her said son & daughter should die without leaving children who should attain a vested interest under the will, upon trust for the person or persons of the blood & kindred of testatrix who would be entitled to the same as her next of kin, in case she had died intestate & unmarried. Upon the death of testatrix, leaving her son & daughter surviving :—Held : the word "unmarried" was not to be construed "without having been married," so as to exclude testatrix's children.

The word "unmarried" is flexible in its meaning, & may be construed to mean "never having been married" or simply "unmarried at the time of the 4083. —— ——.]—The word "unmarried" is a word of flexible meaning; a person speaking of an unmarried woman may mean either a woman who has never been married or a woman who is a widow. The simple statement that a woman died "unmarried" generally is held to mean that she never has been married, nevertheless, if in a formal document the word "unmarried" is used, there would be room to doubt that widows were excluded. But the document I have to interpret is an informal document made by a lady without legal assistance, & I do not doubt that when she used the word "unmarried" she meant to include under it only those who had never been married (JOYCE, J.).—Re FANSHAWE'S TRUSTS (1904), 48 Sol. 4084. —— ——.]—A widow by her will gave the income of her residuary estate in trust for her daughter for life for her separate use without power of anticipation, & after her death in trust for testator's brother for life, & after his death the capital was to be held in trust for all & every person or persons who would have been entitled thereto & in the same shares & proportions as the same would have been distributable under the statutes for the distribution of intestates' estates if she "had died intestate & unmarried." The daughter was a spinster at the date of the will & at testator's death, but she married during her mother's life. Upon the context & comparison of expressions:—Held: the words "then unmarried" must be construed as "without having been married."—Re THISTLETHWAYTE'S TRUST (1855), 24 L. J. Ch. 712; 25 L. T. O. 4092. —— - - .]—Testatrix by her will bequeathed to H. a legacy of £8,000, "& in the event of his death unmarried to his mother B.," & gave the residue of her estate to D. The will contained no directions as to the incidence of testamentary expenses & the legacy had not been separated from the general estate. Questions having arisen as to the interests taken by H. & B. respectively in the legacy, the exor. took out an originating summons for their determination & expressly asked that the costs of the application might be paid out of the legacy. On the construction of the gift:—Held: the legacy vested absolutely in H. on the death of testatrix, but subject to a gift over to B. in the event of his dying a bachelor.

The legacy is subject to a gift over on the death of the legatee unmarried & the expression "unmarried" means "without ever having been married" (YOUNGER, J.).—Re HALL-DARE, LE MARCHANT v. LEE WARNER, [1916] 1 Ch. 272; 85 L. J. Ch. 365; 114 L. T. 559.

appoint, &, in default in trust to pay the interest, etc., to A. for her separate use for life, & after her decease in trust for such person, etc., as at the time of her decease should have been entitled thereto as her next of kin, in case she had died possessed or entitled to the same intestate & unmarried. A was married at the date of the will. She died on Nov. 25, 1852, leaving her husband & three children her surviving. No appointment of the fund was ever made in pursuance of the power. The husband & the brothers & sisters of A. claimed the fund, & thereupon the trustees paid the fund into ct. On petition the ct. :—Held : the word "unmarried" was used by testator only to exclude the husband from taking any benefit under the will, & the children of A. were absolutely entitled.—Re GRATTON'S TRUSTS (1857), 26 L. A. subsequently married & had eight children, but died a widow, & without having appointed the fund. Upon a petition by the children of A. claiming the fund :—Held : "unmarried" meant not having a husband at the time of her death, & therefore the children of A., & not the persons who would have been entitled to A.'s personal estate if she had died without ever having been married, were entitled to the fund.—DAY v. BARNARD (1860), 1 Drew. & Sm. 351 ; 30 L. Pltf., one of testator's two daughters, had married, but had had no children, & she was a widow over seventy years of age. The question was, whether she was now absolutely entitled to her share of the fund : —Held : pltf. was not absolutely entitled, the words "unmarried & without leaving lawful issue" meaning not under coverture at the time of her death.—Re KING, SALISBURY v. RIDLEY (1890), 62 L. The brother died, leaving a widow, but never having had any children :—Held : in order to give full effect to every word in the clause, "unmarried" must be read according to its secondary meaning, as "without leaving a wife." —Re CHANT, CHANT v. LEMON, [1900] 2 Ch. 345 ; 69 L. 4110. "Family."]—The primary meaning of the word "family" in a will is "children."

The word "family" has various meanings. In one sense it means the whole household, including servants, & perhaps lodgers. In another sense it means everybody descended from a common stock, that is to say, all blood relations; & it may, perhaps, include the husbands & wives of such persons. In the sense I have just mentioned, the family of A. includes A. himself; A. must be a member of his own family. In a third sense, the word includes children only; thus when a man speaks of his wife & family, he means his wife & children (JESSEL, M.R.).—PIGG v. CLARKE (1876), 3 Ch. D. 672; 45 L. J. Upon R.'s death, his widow wrongfully entered into possession, & retained possession till her death in 1869, when her devisees entered. A. died in 1871, without ever having entered into possession of the property, having devised to L. all real estate (if any) of which she might die seised. An action having been brought by L. against the devisees of R.'s widow for recovery of the land:—Held: "seised" being a purely technical word, & there being no qualifying context, it must be construed according to its technical meaning; & as A. at the time of her death had no seisin at law or in fact, the property did not pass under her devise.—LEACH v. JAY (1878), 9 Ch. H., spinster, if she be then sole & unmarried, but, if she be then married," testatrix directed her trustees to pay the income of the fourth part to J. H. for her life, for her separate use, & after her death to hold it on trust for her children. In June, 1878, testatrix died, & her husband died in Apr. 1883. In Apr. 1861, J. H. married, & in Nov. 1878, a decree absolute was made for the dissolution of her marriage. There were three children of the marriage. J. H. did not marry again:—Held: the words "then sole & unmarried" meant "not having a husband" at the time of the death of the tenant for life, &, in the events which had happened, J. H. was absolutely entitled to the one-fourth share.—Re LESINGHAM'S TRUSTS (1883), 24 Ch. D. 703; 53 L. J. Ch. 333; 49 L. T. 235; 32 W. R. 116.

If the whole legacy should not be so expended, then any surplus which may arise shall be expended on buying paintings by the old English masters." Testator knew that the corpn. were proposing to erect municipal buildings, & that part of the first floor thereof was to be devoted to a new art gallery. The will did not show any desire on the part of testator to have his name associated with the gallery:—Held: the word "site" in the will was not, in the circumstances, limited to an area on the ground level, but included the area on the first floor of the new municipal buildings. Testator then gave the residue of his estate unto his granddaughters, C. & D., equally to be divided between them, & if but one of them should attain twenty-one, then the residue was to go to the survivor; & he declared that the provision thereby made for C. & D. should not be subject to the control of their husbands, but should be vested in his executors, in trust, for the benefit of C. & D., & their issue respectively, until they should attain twenty-one, being unmarried, or, if married, until a proper & adequate settlement should be made upon them & their issue; but in case they should both die before they attained twenty-one, & without having issue, then he gave the residue over. By a codicil testatrix directed her " exors. & residuary legatees " to vary certain bequests, & empowered them to postpone legacies, the interest in the meantime " to form part of my residuary estate," & gave a legacy to " A., one of my exors. & residuary legatees." By a second codicil testatrix gave a life interest to a legatee in a sum which, under the former dispositions, would have fallen into the residue, & stated that the alteration would make but little difference, as the sum would ultimately fall into the residue. After authorising the exors. to postpone the payment of legacies, & giving other directions, the codicil concluded thus : " These wishes written by myself, & only concern the interest of my exors., will, I feel sure, be quite sufficient for them to fulfil all herein mentioned, but will perhaps be more correct if I sign my name in the presence of two witnesses, who are also in the presence of each other " :—Held : on the will, as explained by the codicils, the bequest to the exors. was not limited to things ejusdem generis with those described, but included the whole residue.—SHEPHERD v. NOTTIDGE (1862), 2 John. & H. 766 ; 1 New Rep. 15 ; 7 L. I apprehend there was, on the one hand, a desire on the part of the ct. to avoid an intestacy, where there was no bequest to the residue, because, unless you gave general effect to the words, although they were preceded by the enumeration of the particulars, testator might die intestate as to his residuary estate, & in that case the ct. conceives that the proper interpretation was to deal with the whole as being an imperfect enumeration in the first instance, followed by those larger words which were intended to carry the whole, so as to avoid an intestacy ; & on the other hand, when the intention was to deal with a particular portion of the estate, or with property referred to as being in a particular locality, there the necessity was no longer felt of giving full & complete effect to all those general words which followed the enumeration of the particulars (WOOD, V.-C.).—GIBBS v. LAWRENCE (1860), 30 L. 4165. —— " Other goods, chattels & effects."]—GIBBS v. LAWRENCE, No. 4149, ante.

4166. —— " Other articles."]—Testator, after bequeathing a legacy of £1,000 to his wife, gave her his writing desk & " all the small coins, curiosities, & other articles " therein contained. At the time of his death, the desk contained, besides the curiosities, a sum of gold, several bank notes, & silver & copper amounting in all to £321 :—Held: the above gift did not include the £321.—DUTTON v. HOCKENHULL (1874), 22 W. R. 701.

4167. —— General words confined to particular kind of property.]—A will by which testator said, " I give & bequeath unto my wife my household goods," & personalty of various kinds particularly specified, continued, " & all other my personal estate property chattels & effects whatsoever & wheresoever to which I am now seised, possessed, or entitled to or may hereafter acquire, & can hereby dispose of to hold the same unto my said wife, her exors., administrators, & assigns for her & their own use & benefit absolutely." Then followed a formal " devise " of real estate vested in him by way of mtge. in fee, & also his trust estates to his wife & brother their " heirs & assigns," upon the trusts affecting the same estates respectively :—Held: the word " personal " controlled the subsequent general words of the gift to the wife, & real estates of which testator died seised as absolute owner did not pass by the will.—JONES v. ROBINSON (1878), 3 C. P. D. 344; 47 L. J. Q. B. 673; 38 L. T. 945; 27 W. R. 48.

4168. —— " & effects of all kinds."]—A gift by will of " my household furniture & effects of all kinds," followed by a gift for another purpose of " all my other real & personal estate " :—Held: to include only effects ejusdem generis.—HUTCHINSON v. ROUGH (1879), 40 L. T. 289.

4169. —— " & all objects of virtu or taste."]—Testator, by his will, gave to his wife absolutely all his gold & silver plate, ornamental & other china, & all objects of virtu or taste; & he declared that his wife should be entitled during her life to his leaseholds house in C. Terrace, & the furniture & other effects therein. At the death of testator there were in his house in C. Terrace ten valuable pictures :—Held: these pictures did not pass under the words " objects of virtu or taste," but passed with the furniture.—Re LONDESBOROUGH, BRIDGEMAN v. FITZGERALD (1880), 50 L. 4172. —— Investment clause—" Or other public company."]—Testatrix, after empowering her trustees to postpone the sale or conversion of any part of her estate, declared that any money by her will directed to be invested should be invested in " any of the public funds, or in Govt. or real or leasehold securities, or upon the stocks, shares, or securities of any railway or other public co." Some time after her death two shares which she had held in an English steamship co. were exchanged for preference & ordinary stock in an American steamship co. which had taken over the business of the English co. :—Held: the words " public co.," when read in connection with the preceding words of the clause, must be confined to public cos. in the United Kingdom, & consequently the trustees were not authorised to retain the American preference & ordinary stock as an investment.—Re CASTLEHOW, LAMONBY v. CARTER [1903] 1 Ch. 352; 72 L. D. General Words in Clause of Nature of Residuary Gift.

4188. Whether rule applicable—"Other goods, chattels & effects."]—Under a gift in a will to A. of "all my jewels, plate, linen, china, carriages, wines, & other goods, chattels & effects whatsoever, as her own goods & chattels for ever," not merely goods & chattels of the same nature with jewels, etc., but all the personal property of testator not otherwise disposed of, passes to A.

These considerations . . . are only met by a rule, certainly of frequent, but not of universal application, confining such a general term as "goods," "chattels," or "effects," following a particular enumeration of specified articles to things ejusdem generis with the articles specified. . . . That it is not of universal application is clearly shown by several authorities. . . . In Arnold v. Arnold, No. 4160, LORD COTTENHAM, thus expresses himself on the subject. ". . . That the mere enumeration of particular articles, followed by a general bequest, 4196. ——.]—It is not, according to my impression of the rule upon which the cts. have acted, consistent with the principles of construction to set aside the effect of clear & unambiguous words because there is reason to suppose that they do not produce the effect which testator intended they should produce. If there be any ambiguity, then of course it is the duty of all cts. to put that construction upon the words which seems best to carry the intention into effect ; but if there be no ambiguity, however unfortunate it may be that the intention of testator shall fail, there is no right in any ct. of justice to say those words shall not have their plain & unambiguous meaning (LORD COTTENHAM, C.).—HARDWICKE (EARL) v. DOUGLAS (1840), 7 Cl. & Fin. 795 ; West, 555 ; 7 E. 4240. Necessary implication to avoid intestacy.]—The ct. may supply words in a will where the context shows, by a necessary implication, what are the words omitted, & unless they are supplied there would be an intestacy. So, where there is a gift by will, & then a gift over not commensurate with the original gift, the ct. will curtail the general words of the gift over by supplying words of reference; as where the first gift is to A.'s children, & the gift over is in default of issue of A., the ct. will read the gift over as though it were in default of "such" issue.

But where there was a devise of a particular property to testator's daughter A., her heirs & assigns, & if she should die under the age of twenty-five years "without having left any child or children," over; &, subsequently, a devise of other real estate to trustees in fee, in trust for A. for her separate use; & after her death, in trust to convey the same "unto & equally amongst such children of A. as tenants in common, the rents & profits in the meantime to be applied for their maintenance; & in case A. should die without leaving any child or children, or, leaving such child or children, all should die under twenty-one," over:—Held: the ct. could not, after "such children of A.," supply the words "as should attain twenty-one," but was at liberty as against testator's heir to construe the word "such" as relating to all the children of A., as they had been mentioned in the previous limitation.—HOPE v. POTTER (1857), 3 K. & J. 206; 5 W. 4244. To meet eventuality not provided for.]—By his will, dated in 1891, testator, who died in 1892, declared, that, should his sister A., who was then a spinster about forty-seven years of age, marry & have children, then when the youngest child of A. or of B. another sister of testator, should attain twenty-one, the whole of his estate should be divided equally between all the children of A. & B., & the issue of such children as therein mentioned, subject to a provision for certain annuities to A. & B.; & that, should A. die without being married, then, when the youngest child of B. had attained twenty-one, his whole estate should be divided equally between her children & their issue as therein mentioned, provision being made for an annuity to B. Testator further provided that his trustees, might, subject to the payment of the annuities, at their discretion raise any part of "the then expectant, presumptive, or then vested shares, or fortune," of any child of B. not exceeding one-third, & apply the same for his or her support, education, advancement, or benefit. Testator then directed the surplus income of his estate to be accumulated. B. was married & had four children, all of whom were still infants. In 1896 A. married. Her husband died in 1897. There was no issue of that marriage, & A. was fifty-four years of age :—Held : the ct. was not at liberty to insert in the will a clause to meet the event which testator had omitted to provide for, viz., of A. marrying & having no children; &, therefore in that event, there was no disposition of testator's estate beyond the annuities.—Re HOCKING, MITCHELL v. LOE, [1898] 2 Ch. 567; 67 L. 4245. Not to prevent vesting.]—Testator gave real property in trust for his granddaughter E., with remainder to her children upon attaining twenty-one, & with remainder over in favour of another grandchild, S., & her children. He gave other property to S., with remainder to her children, but without specifying that they should attain any age, & with a similar gift over in favour of E. & her children. The wording of the will pointed to an intention of testator to make both gifts identical, reference being made to children of S. "capable of taking" & to their shares "vesting at the same age" :—Held : the ct. could not supply words in a will, particularly to prevent vesting, & a daughter of S. who died an infant had taken a vested interest.—Re LITCHFIELD, HORTON v. JONES (1911), 104 L. Its parts may not be in their regular places, but, as has been said of good & evil, where they "lie shuffled together in a confused heap," "study must draw them forth & range them." It is not contrary to legitimate interpretation to read the clauses of which a will consists, as in a different order from that in which they stand written, & if the result of all the passages combined is to convey to the understanding a definite intention as entertained by the writer, that intention, being lawful, must, however awkwardly expressed, prevail (KNIGHT BRUCE, V.-C.).—HUDSON v. BRYANT (1845), 1 Coll. 681; 63 E. The £10,000 was to fall into the residue at the death or marriage of his widow; & testator directed his trustees to divide the residue into as many equal shares as he should have children living at the time of the death or second marriage of his wife, or then dead leaving issue, & upon trust as to one of such shares to invest £1,000 for his son & his son's widow & children, & he gave directions as to the settlement of the share given to one of his daughters; & the will provided that any money advanced to his children & not repaid at his death should be set off against their share of the residue. Testator's son was indebted to him for advances in a sum nearly equal to his share of the residue:—Held: the words in the will directing the residue to be divided between the children living "at the death or second marriage of his wife" must be struck out, as being manifestly inconsistent with the form of the will & the intention of testator.—SMITH v. CRABTREE (1877), 6 Ch. 4272. —— Included by mistake.]—The rule with regard to cases of this sort is, if upon a general view of the will I can collect the general intention, or any one particular object, & there are expressions in the will in some degree militating with it, if I plainly see, those expressions are inserted by mistake, I may reject them.

But I cannot reject any words, unless it is perfectly clear, they were inserted by mistake; & if two parts of the will are totally irreconcilable, I know of no rule but by taking the subsequent words as an indication of a subsequent intention (LORD ALVANLEY, M.R.).—SIMS v. DOUGHTY (1800), 5 Ves. 243; 31 E. 4274. —— —— Admissibility of evidence that clause inserted by mistake.]—Testator gave to his wife, so long as she should continue his widow & until all his four daughters by his former wife should attain twenty-one or die under twenty-one, an annuity of £800, & a further annuity of £100 in respect of each of such daughters who should for the time being be under twenty-one, such annuities to be employed by her in maintaining herself & his said daughters, & in educating the daughters. After all his four daughters had attained twenty-one or died, he bequeathed to his wife during widowhood £600 a year, & after her future marriage £200 a year. If he should have any children by his then wife, he bequeathed to his wife in respect of each of such children who should for the time being be under twenty-one a further annuity of £150, to commence after all his said four daughters should have attained twenty-one or died, to be applied by his wife in maintaining & educating such children, & to be paid by equal half-yearly payments, the first of such payments to be made at the expiration of six calendar months from his decease. He gave his residuary estate among such of his children by both wives as being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters attain that age or marry, in equal shares, subject to a provision for making the share of each child by the second wife exceed the share of a child by the former wife by £3,000. There was the usual clause of maintenance, subject to a proviso that the power of giving maintenance should not be exercised as to any child while the annuity bequeathed to his wife in respect of such child was payable, unless the trustees thought the annuity insufficient. At testator's death several of the daughters by the first wife were under twenty-one:—Held: (1) this was not a case of two inconsistent gifts, but of a gift of something to arise at a future time with a subsequent direction as to the time of payment which was inconsistent with the terms of the original gift, & such subsequent direction could not enlarge the gift, but must be rejected as inconsistent with it; (2) evidence that the latter of the two clauses was left in the will by mistake. & contrary to testator's express instructions, was not admissible; (3) this is not a case of two inconsistent gifts, a gift of something in one clause & a different gift of the same thing in another clause, in which case, no doubt, the rule is that the latter clause, if a judge can find nothing else to assist him in determining the question, is to prevail, as being the last expression of testator's wish (JAMES, L.J.).—Re BYWATER, BYWATER v. CLARKE (1881), 18 Ch. 4275. Words not expressing intention of testator—Mere improbability.]—To authorise the rejection of words in a will, there must be an absolute impossibility of construing the will, those words being retained. The more improbability that testator could have meant what he has expressed, neither amounts to a cause for rejection, nor renders the devise void for uncertainty.

Words transposed to make sense of a will, otherwise insensible, & to make them take some effect, rather than be totally void; not where plain & sensible; much less to let in different devisees & legatees.—CHAMBERS v. BRAILSFORD (1816), 2 Mer. 25; 19 Ves. 652; 34 E. R. 658, L. C.

4287. Clerical error leading to absurdity.]—A clerical error may be corrected where, if uncorrected, it makes the will absurd, & the proper correction can be gathered from the context. Testator devised an estate called Lea Knowl to trustees upon trusts for the benefit of his daughter W., her husband & children, & empowered his trustees, at the request of his daughter W., to sell the estate & stand possessed of the sale moneys upon the trusts thereinbefore declared "concerning the said Lea Knowl estate hereby devised, as to such & so many of them as shall at the time of sale have been existing undetermined & capable of taking effect." He then devised an estate called Croxton to trustees upon similar trusts for the benefit of his daughter C., her husband & children, & empowered his trustees, at the request of his daughter C., to sell the last-mentioned devised hereditaments & stand possessed of the sale moneys, "in trust for such person & persons, & for such estates, ends, intents & purposes, powers, provisoes, & conditions as are hereinbefore limited, expressed, & declared, of & concerning the said Lea Knowl estate hereby devised, as to such & so many of them as shall at the time of sale have been existing undetermined & capable of taking effect":—Held: the words, "the said Lea Knowl estate," in the trust of the moneys to arise from the sale of the Croxton estate had been inserted in the will through an obvious error; to read the words, "the said Lea Knowl estate," literally & grammatically, would be making the will lead to a manifest absurdity or incongruity, & the will must be read as if the words, "the said Croxton estate," were inserted in the place of the words "the said Lea Knowl Estate," in the trusts

4301. —— —— Evident intention to confer gift—Recital of indebtedness of testator to legatee.]—An erroneous recital in a will of indebtedness on the part of testator to a legatee, even though accompanied by a direction to pay, will not amount to a gift of the supposed debt, in the absence of any indication in the will of an intention of bounty in respect thereof; but such intention may be implied from the general scope of the will.—Re ROWE, PIKE v. HAMLYN, [1898] 1 Ch. 153; 67 L. By a codicil made about twelve months afterwards testator recited that he had paid the £3,000 & other sums, for which he was bound for the husband, to an amount exceeding £5,000, in the whole, & directed that, unless that sum at least should be repaid previously to his decease, the sum of £5,000 should be taken in part payment of the £7,000. It was admitted that the husband had not repaid £5,000, but disputed whether testator had paid so much as £5,000 for the husband:—Held: the legacy must be reduced only by the amount remaining unpaid of sums advanced by testator for the daughter's husband.—Re TAYLOR'S ESTATE, TOMLIN v. UNDERHAY (1881), 22 Ch. By a codicil of later date testator recited that he had by his will given the £3,000 to A. for life, with remainder to her children, & afterwards to B. for life, with remainder to his children, & revoked the will as to £2,000, part of the £3,000, from & after the devise to A. & her children, & instead of giving the said sum of £2,000 to B. & his children bequeathed the same to C.:—Held: the erroneous recital in the codical that the £3,000 was given to B. for life did not amount to a gift of a life-estate in the £1,000 which remained unrevoked.

Where you find a recital that a particular person is entitled under another instrument, that does not in general amount to a gift by the instrument which contains the recital, because testator, supposing the interest already to exist, cannot intend by that instrument to created it; but where testator says in any testamentary instrument that he has by that very document made a particular gift, there the ct. will lay hold of this as conclusive evidence of an intention to confer such bounty, & will give to the erroneous recital the effect of an actual gift (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—Re SMITH (1862), 2 John. & H. 594; 70 E. He afterwards made a codicil, which contained a recital that he had by his will given & bequeathed the leaseholds to his son George "after the decease of his daughter Mary, & in default of her leaving lawful issue," & then went on to provide, that, in the event of his son not indemnifying his estate from a liability testator had incurred on his account, all the bequests to his son (but so far as concerned the son only) should be revoked:—Held: interpreting the will by the codicil, the gift over in the former, "in default of such issue," being capable of importing a bequest over on failure of issue living at the death, it must be inferred from the latter that testator employed it in that sense, inasmuch as in the codicil he referred to it as if it were a gift over in default of his daughter's leaving issue, which, as regards personalty, is tantamount to a gift over on failure of issue living at the death; &, consequently, that, assuming the limitation in the will, if it stood alone, would have conferred an absolute interest on the daughter, upon the true construction of the will & codicil taken together, such gift was subject to a good executory bequest over in favour of the children of testator's son.—DARLEY v. MARTIN (1853), 13 C. 4341. ——.]—The rule of law in favour of preferring the latter to the former of two dispositions in a will dealing differently with the same subject is applied only after the failure of every endeavour to give such a reasonable construction to the entire dispositions as will render every part of them operative.

There were two inconsistent clauses in a will. By the former the surplus rents of testator's real estates, after maintenance of the person entitled to the possession until twenty-five, were added to the residue of the personal estate. By the latter the surplus rents, after maintenance of such person until twenty-one, provided his attaining twenty-one happened within the legal limit of time, were settled upon the same trusts as the realty. Testator then by a codicil reciting the former clause directed that the person entitled to the possession of the estate should be let into the receipt of the rents & profits at twenty-one :—Held : as the codicil merely affected the surplus rents between the ages of twenty-one & twenty-five, & as in other respects the latter of the two clauses in the will was more probably consistent with testator's intentions, the latter clause should prevail against the former, notwithstanding the express recognition of the former clause by the codicil.—SHIPPERDSON v. TOWER (1842), 1 Y. & C. In a subsequent clause, he said, "I give, devise, & bequeath unto my daughter Frances James, the sum of £300, when she attains twenty-one, & the house where she now lives, after the decease of her mother, or the day of her marriage. Also, I give, devise, & bequeath unto my daughter Rachel James, the sum of £300, when she attains twenty-one, & the house now in the occupation of David Davies, after the decease of her mother, or the day of her intermarriage." The two houses mentioned in the second clause, were the same as the two first spoken of. Testator never had more than the two children named above:—Held: upon the construction of this will, that upon the death of the mother, the daughters became tenants for life in possession of these houses respectively, with immediate remainder to themselves as tenants in common in tail.

If we can make the clauses of the will consistent, we are bound to do so. He then disposed of all his estate amongst his sons & daughters, giving the shares of his sons to them absolutely, & the shares of his daughters to trustees for them for their respective lives, &, after their deaths respectively, to apply the interest of the shares of his daughters respectively, for the maintenance of their respective children until they attained twenty-one, & then to divide the principal amongst such children respectively as should attain that age. But if all such children of his daughters respectively, or both of them, should die under twenty-one, then upon trust to pay the said trust money to such persons as should then be entitled to his personal estate. A., one of testator's daughters, died, leaving children who attained twenty-one: then L., the only other daughter, died without issue:—Held: cross-limitations were not to be implied between the children of the daughters, & the persons who were to take under the gift over were not sufficiently described, &, therefore, the annuity & L.'s share of the residue must go as in case of an intestacy.—TURNER v. FREDERICK (1832), 5 Sim. 466; 2 L. The word "heir," when used in bequeathing personal estate, may mean persona designata as heir, or it may not mean so. But here there are four descriptions of persons mentioned. When testator used the word "assigns" he contemplated some person who might derive title by an act of the legatee; & when he used the word "heir" he described a person who could not take by the act of the legatee; & to these two words testator has added "exors. & administrators." At the time of making this & the next mentioned will, & of testator's death, J. occupied two closes in Kirton, as tenant to testator. occupation of J. as a close : that testator not being certain what land J. occupied, inquiry was made of a person supposed to know, who stated to the witness, in the presence of testator, that it was all in one close ; & that the witness in consequence of that information, so described it in the will of 1825 :—Held : (1) from the use of the word closes in other parts of the will of 1827, the word close in the devise to R. must be construed in its ordinary sense as denoting an inclosure, & as the parol evidence showed that testator had two closes in Kirton in the occupation of J. SECT. 14.—ADMISSIBILITY OF EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE.

SUB-SECT. 1.—TO ASCERTAIN TESTATOR'S KNOWLEDGE.

A. In General.

4409. General rule—Court must place itself in position of testator.]—MARTIN v. DRINKWATER, No. 4477, post.

4410. —— ——.]—Every claimant under a will has a right to require that a ct. of construction, in the execution of its office, shall by means of extrinsic evidence place itself in the situation of testator, the meaning of whose language it is called upon to declare (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THOMSON & BAXTER v. HEMPENSTALL (1849), 1 Rob. Eccl. 783; 7 Notes of Cases, 141; 13 L. T. O. S. 449; 13 Jur. 814; 163 E. R. 1213.

4411. —— ——.]—(1) A gift by testator to his first cousin, Vincent B., the son of his late uncle, Peter B. Testator had no cousin named Vincent B. who was the son of his late uncle Peter: but he had a first cousin named George Vincent B., who frequently visited & dined with him, whom he commonly called "Vincent," & who was the son of a deceased uncle named Joseph. The son of Peter was named Frederick, & was not in the habit of visiting testator. The ct. admitted evidence of these extrinsic circumstances, & held that testator was mistaken in the description rather than in the name of the legatee; & that George Vincent B., the son of Joseph, was entitled to the legacy.

(2) The evidence of the solr. who prepared the will, that testator had by his instructions expressly indicated that George Vincent B. was the person for whom the legacy was intended, & that he, the solr., had inserted the description without the direction of testator, & in a mistaken belief of the parentage of the legatee, was not admissible.

(3) Where a legatee is pointed out by name & description, & there is no person to whom the name & description both apply, but the name only applies to one & the description only applies to another, the ct. will endeavour, from such of the extrinsic circumstances as are admissible, to ascertain the person meant by testator, & will not hold the bequest void for uucertainty, except in cases where it is impossible to discover any preponderance in favour of one of the persons rather than of the other.

(4) A second rule may be thus stated: if the description contained in the will be not strictly applicable to any matter or person, the matter of the legacy, or the person of the legatee cannot be ascertained by any parol evidence of the intention of testator; but the cts. have a right to ascertain all the facts which were known to testator at the time he made his will, or, as it has been expressed, to place themselves in the testator's position, in order to ascertain whether there exists any person or thing to which the description can be reasonably & with sufficient certainty applied, the presumption necessarily being, that testator intended some existing matter or person (PAGE-WOOD, V.-C.).

(5) If the extrinsic circumstances do not raise a case in which the words used are applicable equally to different persons or things, evidence of intention cannot be received. If, however, the description be not strictly applicable to any person or thing, but is applicable partly to one person or thing, & partly to another, the ct. will not necessarily hold that there is an intestacy. The ct. may in that case endeavour to ascertain whether there is another sense, sometimes called a popular sense, in which the words may be understood, & for this purpose will inquire into the habits of testator, & the circumstances which surrounded him at the time he made his will (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).

(6) I find by a letter which is put in evidence, that testator addressed pltf. by the name of "Vincent Bernasconi." I am entitled to look at the letter for this purpose, but not to ascertain the intention of testator (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).

(7) I find again that both deft. Frederick Bernasconi & pltf. were living in London, but that deft. was not in the habit of visiting testator, whilst pltf. was a frequent visitor at his house, & upon his invitation. These circumstances I am entitled to look at, & I hope I have not allowed my mind to be biassed by any other of the facts which have been tendered in evidence; but I am entitled to take notice of the fact, that, with one of the parties, testator was in constant communication, & with the other he very rarely had any communication (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—BERNASCONI v. ATKINSON (1853), 10 Hare, 345; 23 L. of testator as to whom he intended to benefit or supposed he had benefited, can only be received where the description of the legatee, or of the thing bequeathed, is equally applicable, in all its parts, to two persons or to two things.

(2) Evidence of the circumstances, the habits, & the state of his family at the time he made the will, is admissible, so as to put the ct. in the position of testator in order to ascertain the bearing & application of the language which he uses, & which there exists any person or thing to which the whole description given in the will can be, with sufficient certainty, applied.

(3) Forster Charter made a will in 1859. Testator had had a son named Forster Charter, but this son died unmarried while yet under age. The second son, who thereupon became the elder surviving son, was named William Forster Charter. He was never known as Forster Charter, but was called William or Willie. The younger surviving son was named Charles Charter. He always lived with his father, except for a very short period. Testator had three daughters; two were married & living away. They were not mentioned in the will. The third was unmarried, & lived with her father. Her name was Barbara. She was mentioned in the will, but was erroneously called "Barbara Forster," though she had never been known by that double name. Testator's residence & farm were, in the will, left to "my son Forster Charter," who was made exor. This name & this description were twice repeated. The will went on to provide an annuity for the wife, to be paid "by my exor. Forster Charter" as long as they should "reside together in the same house"; but "should they think proper to live separately" the "said Forster Charter" was to let her live rent free in a neighbouring cottage, & furnish her, in addition to the annuity, with necessary supplies. There was a similar provision as to "Barbara Forster." Probate was granted to the elder surviving son, William Forster Charter. On a citation to recall probate, evidence was received, not only of the state, circumstances, & habits of the family, but of the declarations of testator as to his intentions with regard to his property:—Held: a mistake having been made in the use of one Christian name, which the provisions in the will & the evidence, properly admissible, had corrected, the original probate had been rightfully recalled.—CHARTER v. CHARTER (1874), L. Testator had no grandnephew or other relative of the name of "Robert" Ofner, but he had four grandnephews, Alfred Ofner & Curt Ofner, who were correctly so described in the will, Richard Ofner, a brother of Alfred Ofner, & Botho Ofner. It was proposed to put in evidence a memorandum in testator's handwriting that had been given by him to his solrs. as instructions for his will, in which the following words occurred: "to my grandnephew Dr. Alfred Ofner . . . £200 . . . to his brother Robert Ofner £100":—Held: this document was admissible, not as evidence of intention, but to find out who the "grandnephew" was whom testator had wrongfully described by the name "Robert," & if that were done it was clear that the brother of Dr. Alfred Ofner was intended to be the legatee, & that "Robert" was a mistake for "Richard."

The fact that this document also happened to be instructions for the will did not make it ipso facto any the less admissible, not as instructions, but as a contemporaneous & serious document explanatory of the meaning testator had wrongly attributed to the name "Robert" when describing this legatee.—Re OFNER, SAMUEL v. OFNER, [1909] 1 Ch. 60; 78 L. By a subsequent will A. bequeathed his residuary estate on trust for his daughters & their children, under which daughters dying without issue had power by will to appoint their shares. By a codicil, after reciting that he had advanced to B. other sums besides the £1,000, & that under settlement & under the will, or one of them, his daughter, B.'s wife, would be entitled for her life, & their children would be entitled in remainder to a certain share in the property comprised in the settlement, A. declared that such share under the settlement or will, or either of them, should be taken to be satisfied out of the moneys owing to him by B. other than the £1,000. On the day following the execution of this codicil, B. assigned to A. a policy of assurance on his life as security for £2,000 then owing by him to A. :—Held : the execution of the assignment of the policy was not one of the surrounding circumstances which could be looked at for the purpose of ascertaining testator's intention.

She gave her residuary estate to deft., & appointed pltf. & deft. to be her exors. By a codicil, dated in 1887, she gave additional legacies, including one of £700, to pltf., & in other respects confirmed her will. She afterwards in her lifetime made payments in cash on account of the legacies to pltf., though at that time he was indebted to her in a greater amount. She died in 1888, & her will was proved by deft. alone, liberty being reserved to pltf. to do so. Deft. alleged that pltf. was indebted to testatrix's estate to an amount exceeding the value of his legacies, & on that ground refused to pay them. Pltf. admitted that testatrix had during her life made various payments to him & on his behalf ; but alleged that such payments were intended by testatrix to be gifts. The codicil of 1892 contained no revocation clause. After the death of testator, there was found at his residence an altered copy of the codicil of 1890, which had served as a draft of the later codicil. Between the dates of the codicils testator's property had largely increased in value. The benefits conferred by the later codicil were larger in amounts than those mentioned in the earlier codicil ; but the same class of persons were benefited in both documents, the terms of which were almost identical & contained almost identically the same powers, provisions & limitations. On Apr. 15, 1909, he wrote a letter addressed to her, enclosing a cheque, in which he requested her to tell his exors. that the cheque was instead of the £300 left her by his will. The contents of the letter were not communicated to her, but the letter with the cheque were in her presence sealed up in an envelope & placed in a drawer by testator, who called her attention to the matter & told her to open the envelope on his death. In Dec. 1910, testator requested D. to get the envelope, & he opened it in her presence. He took out the cheque & put the letter without the cheque into another envelope, sealed it, & told her to keep it, & open it on his death. He subsequently sent the cheque, or another for a similar amount, to his bankers, with instructions to place the money to the credit of a joint account in the names of himself & D. with power to either party to draw, & this was accordingly done. The letter was opened & read by D. for the first time on testator's death:—Held: the letter of Apr. 15, 1909, was not admissible in evidence to prove that testator intended that the gift should be in substitution for the legacy.—Re SHIELDS, CORBOULD-ELLIS v. DALES, [1912] 1 Ch. 591; 81 L. A rule prohibiting a judge from so doing would be in my judgment a most serious limitation of the rule that evidence is admissible for the purpose of explaining the meaning of the words used by testator, as distinguished from evidence of testator's intention; & would be also a serious limitation of the rule that for the purpose of explaining the meaning of the words used by testator evidence is admissible of the circumstances surrounding testator at the time of making his will. I think that evidence is admissible to show that expressions used in the will had acquired an appropriate meaning either generally or by local usage or amongst particular classes, & that where any doubt arises upon the true sense & meaning of the words themselves or any difficulty as to their application in the surrounding circumstances the sense & meaning of the language may be investigated & ascertained by evidence dehors the instrument itself (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.).—Re RAYNER, RAYNER v. RAYNER, [1904] 1 Ch. 176; 73 L. 4538. —— Words unintelligible in primary sense.]—(1) It is well settled in my opinion, I am reading from Proposition 3 in Wigram on Extrinsic Evidence (3rd edit. at p. 42), that, "Where there is nothing in the context of a will, from which it is apparent that testator has used the words in which he has expressed himself in any other than their strict & primary sense, but his words, so interpreted, are insensible. With reference to extrinsic circumstances, a ct. of law may look into the extrinsic circumstances of the case, to see whether the meaning of the words be sensible in any popular or secondary sense, of which, with reference to these circumstances, they are capable." Now here is a case in which, strictly speaking, the words of the gift are not sensible with respect to extrinsic circumstances (JOYCE, J.).

(2) Parol evidence is not to be resorted to except for the purpose of proving a fact which makes intelligible something in the will that, without the aid of extrinsic evidence, would not be intelligible (JOYCE, J.).

(3) In the case of Higgins v. Dawson, No. 3672, ante, it was not, in my opinion, intended to overrule the multitude of cases in which, where the particular terms used, whether purporting to describe things or persons, were insensible with reference to extrinsic facts, evidence of the surrounding circumstances has been admitted to see whether such terms had not been employed in some secondary sense not substantially different (JOYCE, J.).—Re GLASSINGTON, GLASSINGTON v. FOLLETT, [1906] 2 Ch. 305; 75 L. Some years before making this devise he had let to two of his sons for the purposes of their business, an office standing in the yard of S. House & the stable & coach-house belonging to the house, except a room on the first floor of the coach-house to which the only access was through the house, & the sons were in occupation till his death:—Held: the devise included the room over the coach-house, but did not include the rest of the stable & coach-house nor the office, for the property which was in testator's own occupation answered the whole of the description, & that being so, the ct. could not enter into the question of inconvenience, & reject the reference to occupation as falsa demonstratio.

We must first construe the words, & having done so, then look at the extrinsic evidence to see whether there is anything which those words fit. . . . Taking the words of the will in their natural sense there is a property which answers every word of the description, & that being so the argument ab inconvenienti has no application. 4709. ·]—Testator devised an estate to "Elizabeth Abbott, a natural daughter of Elizabeth Abbott, of G., single woman, & who formerly lived in his service," for life, with remainder to her children. At the date of the will, there was no person answering this description; for though Elizabeth Abbott, who had formerly lived in his service, had a natural child, yet it was a son & not a daughter, & was named John & not Elizabeth; besides this, Elizabeth herself was not then a single woman, but had married one Caddy, & had a legitimate daughter Margaret. John Abbott being dead, the property was claimed, first, by pltf., on the ground that the gift was void for uncertainty; secondly, by the children of John Abbott; & thirdly, by Margaret; but the ct. held, under the circumstances, that the children of John Abbott were entitled.—RYALL v. HANNAM (1847), 10 Beav. 536; 16 L. When he made his will he had a great-great niece named Elizabeth Jane S. who was known to him, & there was not then any other person at all answering the description. He formerly had had a niece with whom he was intimate, & to whom he had by a former will made precisely the same bequests as those in question, but when he made his last will he knew that she had been dead some time:—Held: Elizabeth Jane S. was entitled to the legacies.—STRINGER v. GARDINER (1859), 4 De G. & J. 468; 33 L. 4714. ——.]—Testator devised & bequeathed his real & personal estate to trustees absolutely, upon trust as to one moiety of the personalty, to pay & divide the residue equally between & amongst his nephew John & his niece Hannah (whom he described as the children of his late brother Joseph), "& all & every the children of my late nephew Mark Ingle, & my niece Eliza Wheelwright," share & share alike. He then desired his trustees to stand possessed of a moiety of the proceeds of the sale of his realty, upon trust to divide the same, as before mentioned. In a codicil, testator referred to the "legacy left & apportioned to my niece Eliza." Some years before the date of the will a brother of testator, named Mark, had died, leaving three sons, the two petitioners, & a third son, named Mark. The evidence showed that, at testator's death, the nephew Mark, who had had a son born to him in England, & had emigrated to America, where he had another child, was still living; also, that testator knew of the birth in England of the child of Mark, & of his emigration to America, & that from some circumstances he, testator, had, shortly before the date of the will, been led to suppose that Mark might be dead:—Held: (1) by the words "my late nephew Mark," testator meant his (living) nephew Mark, & not his late brother Mark, & there being only one living person answering to the name of Mark Ingle, this was not a case of equivocation, & evidence of intention was not admissible.

(2) Evidence of the state of his family & of surrounding circumstances was admissible.

(3) Of all the cases which come before the ct. for its decision, none can be more embarrassing & more unsatisfactory that those which arise upon the construction of wills. The ct. has no real guide to enable it to arrive at a conclusion. The only things which can be called guides are certain rules which the ct. has laid down, & which may be extracted from the decisions. Beyond that, the decisions are not of the slightest use (SIR JAMES BACON, V.-C.).—Re INGLE'S TRUSTS (1871), L. R. 11 Eq. 578; 40 L. J. Ch. 310; 24 L. T. 315; 19 W. R. 676.

4716. On the other hand, if the words of description when examined do not fit with accuracy, & if there must be some modification of some part of them in order to place a sensible construction on the will, then the whole thing must be looked at fairly in order to see what are the leading words of description, & what is the subordinate matter, & for this purpose evidence of extrinsic facts may be regarded (LORD SELBORNE, C.).—HARDWICK v. HARDWICK (1873), L. Evidence was adduced to show that testator had always treated these daughters as his children, & that, on giving instructions for his will, he had said that he had a wife & three daughters. 4766. —— —— ——.]—Testatrix gave a sum of stock to trustees to pay the dividends to her brother C. & his wife E. for their lives, & after the decease of the survivor, the capital to be divided between all the children of her brother. The brother had three children by his first wife, two children by his second wife E. before marriage, & one child after marriage, which were facts well known to testatrix, who promised, as the claim alleged, that if he married his wife E. she would provide for all his children by her, & she in fact treated all the children equally as her nephews & nieces, & it was further alleged that testatrix gave instructions that he will should be so drawn as to provide equally for both classes of children, & that she believed such to be the effect of the words of the will:—Held: the illegitimate children must be excluded from the bequest; & the words of the will being distinct, no extrinsic evidence could be received to show what the intention of testatrix was.—ELLIS v. HOUSTOUN (1878), 10 Ch. As regards the evidence that testator was accustomed to call his first cousins once removed second cousins, it is enough to say that as the parties have come here on a special case, evidence is not admissible. Testator had two nephews called Robert; one, the son of his brother John C., the other of his brother Thomas C.; & testator has no brother Joseph, nor was there any other Joseph C. This is a latent ambiguity, & may be explained by evidence.

The evidence which must consequently be admitted to explain the will shows that testator was intimately acquainted with the one, & little known to the other; so little indeed that it does not appear he knew him by name. The presumption therefore is that testator intended that nephew whom he knew best, & with whose name it is certain that he was acquainted (GRANT, M.R.).—CARELESS v. CARELESS (1816), 1 Mer. 384; 19 Ves. 601; 35 E. Testatrix, at the date of her will & at her death, had a mansion called Quendon Hall, & land around it, & also other detached farms in Essex. There was no parish of Quendon Hall, nor was the term "Quendon Hall Estates" a recognised appellation of any particular property:—Held: (1) extrinsic evidence was admissible to show what testatrix understood to be comprised in that description.

(2) For this purpose, old account books, in the handwriting of testatrix, one containing "an account of timber cut down on the Quendon estate," & a paper headed "1844: Quendon Hall Farms," written by testatrix at about the date of her will, were received in evidence.

(3) Evidence was also admitted to prove that much of the property had been derived by testatrix under the will of a relative, who had appended to her gift a direction that her devisee should assume the name & arms of Cranmer, particularly as testatrix in this cause had annexed a like condition to the above-mentioned devise.

4857. —— Extended effect to bequests previously specific.]—Above sect., which provides that a will shall speak & take effect as if executed immediately before the death of testator, unless a contrary intention appear by the will, will probably give an extended effect to what would have been a specific bequest of a class of personal property before the statute. For instance, a bequest, since the Act, of "all my stock" would probably pass all the stock of testator at the time of his death; but a gift of "all stock which I have purchased" must be confined to stock actually purchased at the date of the will.

A will made since the statute contained the words, "I hereby exonerate my sister from all claims in respect of money laid out by me in improvements of the estates in Scotland, & which money has according to the laws of Scotland been charged thereon":—Held: this exoneration only applied to moneys so charged at the date of the will, & not to money afterwards laid out & charged, nor even to money then laid out, but afterwards charged.—DOUGLAS v. DOUGLAS (1854), Kay, 400; 23 L. which would be included, the will is to speak at his death, therefore a different construction is to be put on the will as to the intention to exclude dower, & that it is to be read as if the execution of the will had immediately preceded his death, so as to impute to him a change of intention? 4860. Meaning of speak from death—Dependent on intention.]—Above sect. provides that "every will shall be construed, with reference to the real estate & personal estate comprised in it, to speak & take effect as if it had been executed immediately before the death of testator, unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will." That is a very different thing from saying that the will is for all purposes to speak & take effect as if it had been executed immediately before the death of testator. The question is one of intention, & of intention to undo what has been done; &, for the purpose of ascertaining the intention, I am entitled to look, not merely at the part of the will which immedately deals with the subject-matter, but also at any other part of the instrument, including the date; & the date appears to me to show decisively that no intention to undo what was only done at a subsequent time can be attributed to testator, & that his language is to be ascribed to a totally different cause. In my judgment the terms of the sect. are not such as to compel me to impute to testator an intention which manifestly never existed in fact (STIRLING, J.).—Re WELLS' TRUSTS, HARDISTY v. WELLS (1889), 42 Ch. 4861. —— —— No particular clause indicated.]—A. devises to G. for life, "my cottage & all my land at S.," subject to the stipulation, among others, that the plantations, heather, & furze be all preserved "in their present state," & devises "all other, my freehold manor, messuages, lands, & real estate whatsoever & wheresoever" to trustees upon trust for sale. At the date of his will A. had a small cottage with 22 acres of rough land held with it, & he subsequently contracted to purchase from G. a house of considerable size with gardens & land comprising ten acres closely adjoining the cottage & land. The contract was not completed at his death:—Held: (1) a contrary intention within above sect. was not shown with sufficient clearness, but construing the will as if it had been made on the day of testator's death, having regard to the circumstances at that date & to the residuary devise, the specific devise more aptly referred to the cottage & rough land, & did not carry the after-acquired property; (2) the words "all my land at S." would, if used alone, have been sufficient to carry the after-acquired land with the house standing upon it; but by force of the context the word "land" must be taken as confined to lands in contradistinction from buildings; (3) semble: above sect., which provides that a will shall speak as to the real & personal estate comprised in it, i.e., the will, from the day of testator's death, leaves open the question whether a particular property passes by the specific or the residuary devise.

It does not say that we are to construe whatever a man says in his will as if it were made on the day of his death.

Applying, then, that rule to this will, we look to see what is the real estate comprised in it? It is to be observed that the Act speaks of it, that is, the will. When there is a puzzle as to which clause of the will carries a particular property, the statute does not say which clause is to outweigh the other, but only that the property is to be comprised in the will. Be it so. The question still remains which clause carries the property, the residuary or the specific devise? (LINDLEY, L.J.).—Re PORTAL & LAMB (1885), 30 Ch. D. 50; 54 L. J. Ch. 1012 L. 4863. ——— ———.]—By his will testator gave twenty-five shares in a co. to W. At the date of the will these shares were of the value of £50 each with £5 credited as paid up. After the date of the will the shares were divided into £10 shares with

£1 paid up, & remained in that form at testator's death. After the date of his will he sold several £50 shares &, subsequently, several £10 shares. On a summons to ascertain whether the legacy was a gift of shares as they existed at the date of the will or at the date of testator's death:—Held: this was a general legacy in language appropriate to describe the state of things which existed at the death & did not show a contrary intention within above sect., & therefore W. only took £10 shares as they existed at the death.

I think Mr. Carson's argument with reference to the sect. independently of authority is the correct one. If personal property is comprised in a will, I say personal property because we have nothing to do with realty here, then the will must speak as to that property from the death of testator, as if it had been written immediately before his death (WARRINGTON, J.).—Re GILLINS, INGLIS v. GILLINS, [1909] 1 Ch. 345; 78 L. 4865. —— ——.]—Testator bequeathed "the interest arising from money invested in (inter alia), the Lambeth Waterworks Co." to a legatee for life & then over. Between the dates of his will & death the undertaking of the Lambeth Waterworks Co. was acquired by the Water Board under the provisions of the Metropolis Water Act, 1902 (c. 41), & a sum of Water B. stock had been issued to testator as compensation in respect of the ordinary stock which at the date of his will he held in the Lambeth Waterworks Co.:—Held: the Water B. stock did not pass under the bequest.

But now that Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), has expressly enacted, & testators must be taken to know the Wills Act, that a will shall be construed, with reference to personal estate, to speak & take effect as if it had been executed immediately before testator's death, unless a contrary intention appears by the will, it requires, in a case like the present, some more specific indication of such "contrary intention" than the mere circumstance that testatrix has described the stock by the words "my three-&-a-quarter per cents.," words which, although a meaning could be given to them by reference to what was the state of things at the date of the will, have also a distinct meaning in reference to the state of things at the date of her death, & might have been left in the will for the very purpose of passing her property as it existed at the latter date, & because testatrix knew, that, by the operation of the Wills Act, they would pass that property. When I refer to a particular thing, such as a ring or a horse, & bequeath it as "my ring" or "my horse," it seems to me there might be considerable difficulty in saying that the "contrary intention" to which the Act, in sect. 24, refers, does not appear on the face of the will; but when a bequest is of that which is generic, of that which may be increased or diminished, then, I apprehend, the Wills Act requires something more on the face of the will for the purpose of indicating such "contrary intention" than the mere circumstance that the subject of the bequest is designated by the pronoun "my" (JOYCE, J.).—Re SLATER, SLATER v. SLATER, [1906] 2 Ch. 480; 75 L. 4870. —— Reference to date—Clear reference.]—(1) Testator gave, after the decease or second marriage of his wife, all his leaseholds situate at C. to his son absolutely, charged nevertheless with the payment of all mtge. debts charged thereon, & "also with the payment of the annuity of £9 now charged thereon in favour of my sister." Testator at the date of his will was possessed of two leasehold properties at C., one subject to a mtge., & the other subject to the annuity of £9. He acquired another leasehold property at C. between the date of his will & the date of his death:—Held: the after-acquired leasehold property passed under the gift to the son.

The authorities have established this, that, when the date of the will, as contrasted with the time of testator's death, is clearly referred to in the will—that is evidence of a contrary intention. That was decided in Cole v. Scott, No. 4856, ante. There there was a clear contrast between the two dates in the gift itself, & it was held that the after-acquired property did not pass. It is suggested that there is the same contrast in the present case, by reason of the use of the word "now" with reference to the annuity charged on a part of the property bequeathed to the son. But all testator says is that the property given to the son is to bear the charges upon it, whether mtges. or annuity. He speaks of the annuity "now charged." It was an existing annuity at the date of the will, but it might come to an end before the death of testator by the death of the sister. The words are merely an indication of the particular charge (BAGGALLAY, L.J.).

(2) I cannot help expressing some regret at the result, for I do not think it was the intention of the legislature to legislate for specific gifts of this kind. But it has been decided that such gifts are within Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 24 (JAMES, L.J.).—Re ORD, DICKINSON v. DICKINSON (1879), 12 Ch. D. 22; 41 L. T. 13; 28 W. R. 141, C. A.

In 1847 a railway separated part of a field from a farm belonging to testator, occupied by a tenant, & at the date of the will testator occupied a portion of the separated part as potato ground, the remainder of that part, called T., being still occupied by the tenant as part of his farm: but testator, before his death, took T. into his own occupation, & occupied it to his death in 1856. with the house & land admitted to form part of the devise to the wife. A closer approximation to the quantity of "twenty acres" was obtained by excluding T.:—Held: T. did not pass under the devise to the wife, the words "now occupied by me" being matter of description of the property devised, & was not to be construed as speaking from the death, within Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 24.—HUTCHINSON v. BARROW (1861), 6 H. & N. 583; 30 L. Testator made a codicil to his will, dated Dec. 25, 1869, which did not mention this legacy. At the date of the will the Anchor Inn was in course of reconstruction, with the view of separating two rooms from the inn to be let to a tenant who was to occupy them as a shop. The alterations were completed between the date of the will, & the death of testator, & at the latter date were occupied as a shop by a tenant of testator. Prior to & during the alterations the premises were occupied solely by testator, who continued up to the date of his death to reside in the inn which had been separated from the shop:—Held: as the shop was not leased by testator until after the date of his will, it was included in the terms of the bequest, & so passed to testator's son.—Re EDWARDS, ROWLAND v. EDWARDS (1890), 63 L. After the date of his will, & before his death, testator's property was largely increased. C. H., her heirs & assigns, according to the custom of the manor. The first deft. was her customary heir. At the date of his will testator was possessed of one undivided moiety of the copyholds for a customary estate in fee simple. In 1848 he became possessed of the other undivided moiety of the same copyholds, & held the entirety at the date of his death. In 1873 the daughter, who was the customary heiress of testator, was admitted tenant of the entirety for her life, & in 1891 she enfranchised & sold part of the copyholds:—Held: apart from Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 24, the devise in testator's will operated to pass the entirety of the copyholds, parcel of the manor of Lambeth, to which testator was entitled at the time of his death; & the same now belonged to the first deft., together with the trusts funds representing the proceeds of such of the copyholds as had been sold; testator had not expressed a contrary intention within above sect., the expression "now held by me" being mere additional description of the property & not an essential part of the description, cutting down the earlier part of the devise.—Re HORTON, LLOYD v. HATCHETT, [1920] 2 Ch. 1; 89 L. The three cottages answered this description at the time. In 1876 testator became possessed of a piece of garden ground, which he subsequently occupied with one of the three cottages. After his will he sold his N. B. guaranteed stock, & died possessed of shares & stock in the N. B. Railway, acquired by several successive purchases, exceeding the amount bequeathed to A.:—Held: the bequest being a specific thing, which had been adeemed, & was not in testator's possession at the time of his death, a "contrary intention," so as to exclude the operation of Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 24, sufficiently appeared upon the will.

Suppose a man to have, at the date of his will, a picture of the Holy Family by some inferior artist, & to give by his will "my Holy Family." He afterwards disposes of this picture & subsequently acquires, by purchase or gift, a very much better one on the same subject, painted by an eminent artist. Would it not be a monstrous construction to hold that the picture existing in testator's possession at the time of his death would pass? Where there is a clearly indicated intention upon the face of the will to give the single specific thing, & nothing else, it would be a very narrow construction of the words of sect. 24 to hold that you must sweep in everything to which the words might be held to apply, without the slightest reference to the state of things existing at the date of the will (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—Re GIBSON, MATHEWS v. FOULSHAM (1866), L. The wife had a discretion to discontinue the business, & in case the business should be discontinued testator directed the trustees to get in the share then appertaining to his estate in "the said co-partnership trade or business," &, after making good to the wife "one full third share of the profits," invest the same, & pay the income to his wife for life. After the death of the wife, he directed the trustees out of the profits of his said share & interest in the business, if continued, & out of the trust fund, if the business should have been discontinued, to pay certain pecuniary legacies, & subject thereto to hold the fund in trust for A. Testator died in 1881. 4932. "As may by law be given for charitable purposes"—Death after Mortmain & Charitable Uses Act, 1891 (c. 73)—Will before Act.]—Testator, by his will made before the passing of above Act, bequeathed the residue of his estate to trustees in trust to pay the income thereof to his wife for her life, & from & after her decease in trust to pay "such part of his residuary trust estate which may by law be given for charitable purposes" to the Brompton Hospital ; & as to the remainder of the said residuary trust estate, upon trust for E. absolutely. Testator died after the passing of the Act :—Held : the Act applied, & as the will did not show any intention on the part of testator to confine the gift to the hospital to such part of the residue as could by the law as it stood at the date of the will be given for charitable purposes, the hospital was entitled to all the residue, real as well as personal.

But, having regard to Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 24, I am of opinion that the true meaning & effect of the words used is to pass all property of testator at the time of his death which could by law be given for charitable purposes. This is in accordance with the decisions on specific gifts. If the words describe a particular property which testator had at the date of his will, that & that alone will pass (DAVEY, L.J.).—Re BRIDGER, BROMPTON HOSPITAL FOR CONSUMPTION v. LEWIS, [1894] 1 Ch. 297 ; 63 L. Upon a summons taken out by the trustees of the will for the determination of the question whether the piece of meadow land at the rear of The Cedars was, upon the true construction of the will, included in the gift of the income of The Cedars in favour of the daughter, or whether such piece of meadow land became, upon the death of testator's widow, subject to the trusts declared as to Broad Green Lodge:—Held: the will, as to the property comprised in it, must speak from the date of testator's death, at which time the piece of meadow land was occupied by him as part of the Broad Green Lodge property, & the gift of the income of his property known as The Cedars comprised the premises let by him as The Cedars, but not the piece of meadow land at the rear, which formed part of testator's residuary estate.—Re POTTER, STEVENS v. POTTER (1900), 83 L. P. or his under-tenants to hold them, their heirs & assigns for ever, as tenants in common." The property in the occupation of J. P. at the time of the making of the will, & of testator's death, consisted of five cottages & about three acres of meadow land adjoining:—Held: the land passed to B., C., & D., as well as the cottages.—DOE d. 4941. ——— ———.]—Testator devised to a younger son, as follows: "All that my messuage or dwelling-house & premises, with the piece of land thereto adjoining in T., with their respective appurtenances." Upon a special case, it was stated, that, when the testator first became possessed of the property, forty years ago, there was no fence to part the garden (No. 566 on the plan) from the land, & the parts numbered 567 & 568 formed one field, which was then called "The five acres"; that, about thirty years ago, he planted across it a fence, & after that called 567 "The Pear Tree Piece," & 568 "The Second Grass Piece"; that the other pieces were in like manner separated by fences, but there was a communication with all of them by means of gates: that the turnpike-road which separated 573 & 574 was made by the trustees under an Act of Parliament some time after testator had

Creation of easement—Devise by common owner.] See EASEMENTS, Vol. XIX., pp. 51, 52, Nos. 203.—AUS.

4944. Benefit of restrictive covenant—Exercise of power of appointment.]—About 1870 a considerable building property called "The B. Estate," belonging to G. D. in fee simple, was in course of development on building agreements entitling the builders to leases, with an option of purchasing the fee simple, & in 1876 S. B. held one of the leases & options in respect of land & a workshop called 14, Wharf Road. G. D. died in 1882, having devised the B. Estate to E. D. & F. F., their heirs & assignees, on trust to pay the rents to E. D. for life, & after her death to stand seised upon trust for such persons as she should by will appoint, & in default of appointment in trust for her right heirs. Soon after G. D.'s death S. B. exercised his option, & E. D. & F. F. conveyed 14, Wharf Road, to him in fee, subject to restrictive covenants (therein contained) by him with E. D. & F. F., their heirs & assigns, to the intent that the covenants might for ever thereafter run with the hereditaments thereby granted, that S. B. & all persons deriving title under him would not, without the written consent of E. D. & F. F., their heirs or assigns, or the persons deriving title under them or either of them, (1) carry on or permit to be carried on on the premises conveyed any trade or business except that of a builder or coal merchant; & (2) would not do or permit on the premises any act, matter or thing whatsoever which might be a nuisance, annoyance or disturbance to E. D. & F. F., or the persons deriving title under them or either of them. F. F. died in 1885. E. D. died in 1917, having by her will exercised her power of appointment so as to make R. I. tenant for life of the portion of the B. Estate of which 14, Wharf Road, was part, & given him one-half of her residuary personalty. R. I. & F. R. E. were appointed her exors. S. B. died in 1883, having by his will vested in the trustees thereof 14, Wharf Road, which they let for a term of years to X. to be used, & which were used, for a business which was not permitted by covenant (1). X. in the course of this business committed breaches of covenant (2) as regarded annoyance & disturbance. R. I., as tenant for life of adjoining freehold lands also forming part of the Branksome Estate, sued S. B.'s trustees & X. for an injunction to restrain the breaches of covenant. At the trial F. R. E., the other exor. of E. D., was joined as co-pltf., he & R. I. being the legal personal representatives of the survivor of the original covenantees:—Held: the dispositions of E. D.'s will did not amount to an assignment to her devisees of the benefit of the covenants; but the benefit could pass by operation of law as well as by express assignment, & the covenants could be enforced by R. I. & F. R. E. as representing together both her real estate & personal estate.—IVES v. BROWN, [1919] 2 Ch. 311; 88 L. J. Ch. 373; 122 L. T. 267.

4963. Gift of fund on contingency—Accretions to fund pending happening of contingency.]—A. bound himself to pay £16,000 on the death of the survivor of himself & wife, on certain trusts, under which, on a contingency, the amount was to revert to himself. A., by his will, gave the £16,000, i it should revert, to trustees, on trust to pay thereout £14,000 to C., & three legacies of £500 each to charities, & "the remaining sum of £500" to the Foundling Hospital. His wife survived him nine years, & the sum of £16,000 was invested in £25,702 3 per cents. In 1848 the contingency happened, when the fund reverted, & amounted to considerably more than £16,000:—Held: the legatees were entitled to money legacies only, & not to the whole fund.—LOSCOMBE v. WINTRINGHAM (1849), 12 Beav. 46; 50 E. 4971. Absence of intention to include insufficient.]—When A., seised of W., B., & G., of which W. stands limited to A.'s issue in strict settlement, & must, on the death of A., vest in B., his eldest son, as first entailee, devises to his son, C., B., & devises to his son D., all the remainder of his lands over which he has "a power of disposal," the reversion of W. passes, with G., to D., although, in a remote part of the will, A., in speaking of his control over B., mentions W., as an estate "over which he has no power."

A party may think that he has power when he has no power, & yet he may wish to pass all; he may say, I give all I can dispose of, whether I think I can dispose of it or not—it does not follow from the language used, that he meant to exclude (ERSKINE, J.).

4976. —— ——.]—A devise "of all property which I am possessed of, which is not settled by either of my marriage settlements," will pass a reversion in fee, of an estate limited to testator by his marriage settlement.

4977. —— —— "Not settled in jointure upon my wife."]—A. being possessed of lands at L. which had been settled on his marriage on himself for life, remainder to his wife for life for her jointure, remainder to the heirs of their bodies, with reversion in fee to himself; & having other lands at P. & Q. settled to the same uses, except a coppice, part of Q., of which coppice as well as of some other lands he was seised in fee, after the death of his wife, & having only two daughters living, devised to his daughter J. in tail his unsettled estates by name, & all other his freehold, copyhold, & leasehold lands, which he was possessed of or entitled to, & which were settled in jointure on his late wife, except the coppice, which he directed should always be held with his estate at P., she, his said daughter, & the heirs of her body paying out of all the aforesaid lands a certain annuity unto his other daughter A. M. for life: & in case his said daughter J. should die & leave no issue, then to his other daughter A. M. for life, remainder to her children, charged, etc., remainder to his nephew in fee:—Held: the reversion of the settled lands did not pass by the will, but were excepted out of the general clause by force of the restrictive words, "& which are not settled in jointure," etc., not only by the natural import of those words, but because of the incongruity of imputing to the devisor an intention of devising estates tail & for life to his daughters in lands which were before settled on them in tail general; though it did not appear that testator had any other real estate on which the general clause could operate, except the reversion of his settled lands.—

5031. "All personal property on the estates"—Ready money in house.]—(1) Testator divided his will into several clauses or articles, which he numbered; &, after appointing several trustees, & providing for their succession, he, by the second article of his will, bequeathed to his trustees, in trust for the use of his wife & children as thereinafter detailed; viz., all his household furniture, plate, medals, china, linen, books, paintings, prints, wines, provisions, horses, carriages, cows & sheep, & all other live & dead stock in & about his premises, with all his ready money in his house & at his agents & bankers, with all moneys due to him at the time of his decease: also, he gave & devised all & every his dwelling-house & mansion, buildings, gardens & lands, with the appurtenances, & all his real estates, upon trust as aforesaid, & upon the uses thereafter stated, that is to say, all his real estate in & about Denne Hill, etc., until the youngest of his surviving children attained the age of twenty-five years: at that period he willed that his eldest surviving child should be put into possession of all his freehold & leasehold property, including all timber & underwood, & all personal property on the estates. By a subsequent article he appointed his eldest son or next surviving child in seniority his residuary legatee. There were other clauses in the will, & also a testamentary writing, from which it appeared to have been a principal object of testator to give his children the advantage of having the same home for a period after his death as they had enjoyed in his lifetime:—

Held: the property described as all the testator's ready money in his house, etc., did not belong to the residuary legatee, & did not fall within the description of all personal property on the estates, etc., but was to be applied for the benefit of the wife & children.

(2) Testator bequeathed to trustees, for the use of his wife & children, the interest of his property in the English & French funds; & he gave the capital to the surviving children, that is to say, to be equally divided at the period of his eldest surviving child attaining the age of thirty. By a codicil he bequeathed to his exors., for the use of his children, "whatever sum now stands in my name, or may hereafter, in the Dutch funds, or any other funds, including the interest arising therefrom":—Held: the words "any other funds" included stock in the British funds.—MONTRESOR v. MONTRESOR (1845), 1 Coll. 693; 63 E. 5034. Whether reversionary interest passes by general disposition—"All personal estate & effects whatsoever."]—Trustees holding moneys in trust for a married woman invested the amount in the purchase of land; & by the purchase deed, to which the vendor & they were the only parties, they declared themselves possessed of the estate, in trust to pay the income to the married woman for her separate use, for life, &, after her decease, in trust for the benefit of all the children of the husband & wife equally between them; &, in default of children without issue, then in trust for the husband in fee, & power was reserved to the trustees, at the request of the husband & wife, to sell the property; & thereupon, with all convenient speed, to pay out the produce in the purchase of other freehold estates, & so on toties quoties. At the end of fifteen years the estate was sold, & the purchase-money was invested as money, & the income was paid to the married woman for forty-four years, until her death. Several years after the sale of the estate the trustees, by a deed, which the husband & wife executed, declared that they held the fund upon the trusts of the first purchase deed. The husband died intestate, & the wife survived him for ten years. By her will she gave "all" her "personal estate & effects whatsoever & wheresoever, & of every kind soever, either in possession, remainder, reversion or expectancy," unto two of her children:—Held: there was no evidence that the widow intended to change the character of the fund from being real estate; there being children entitled for their lives to the fund, it was not competent for her alone to change its character; but, as the property vested in her subject to her children's life interest, it was competent to her to have given such reversionary interest by will, but the words she had used were not sufficient to include it.—GILLIES v. LONGLANDS (1851), 4 De G. & Sm. 372; 20 L. The niece M. married G. B. who died, leaving his wife & one son surviving; C. also married but had no issue. Two of the trustees died, & a considerable surplus of testator's personal estate remained after paying debts, legacies, & annuities: —Held: if the devise had commenced with the words "all the rents, issues, & profits," & the passage before these words had been omitted, the three nieces would respectively have taken estates for life in the freehold tenements under the will; with cross remainders between them for life, in the event of one or two of them dying without issue.—MURTHWAITE v. JENKINSON (1821), 6 Moore, C. P. 13.

5046. —— ——.]—T. M. by will gave, devised, & bequeathed to three trustees, & to the survivors & survivor of them, & the heirs, exors., & administrators of such survivor, all & every his freehold, copyhold, & leasehold estates, & all his personal estate & effects whatsoever & wheresoever, in trust to pay thereout several legacies & annuities, & for other the purposes in his will mentioned. He then gave legacies & annuities to a considerable amount, & directed that the annuities should be payable out of his £26,400 three per cent. consols. The case found that a large surplus of the personal estate remained after paying the debts, legacies, & annuities; but did not find that the legacies were really paid or that the annuitants were either satisfied, or dead. He then devised as follows: "All the rents, issues, dividends, interest, profits, & produce of all the rest, residue, & remainder of my estate & effects whatsoever & wheresoever, & of what nature, kind, or quality soever, as well as personal, which I shall die siesed or possessed of, interested in, or entitled to at the time of my decease, I do give, devise, & bequeath unto my three nieces, E. M., M. M., & C. M., equally to be divided among them, share & share alike, for & during the term of their natural lives. & from & after the decease of them, or either of them, it is my will that the lawful issue of them & each of them shall have & enjoy his or her mother's share of all such residue of such rents, etc., for life in like manner. & if either of my nieces shall happen to die in the lifetime of the others or other of them, without issue of her body lawfully begotten, that the share of her so dying without issue as aforesaid shall go to & be shared & divided equally between the survivors of my nieces for their respective lives, & afterwards by the lawful issue of the survivors of my nieces in like manner. & if all my nieces & their issue, save one, shall die without issue lawfully begotten, then such surviving niece shall have & enjoy the whole of the rents, etc., of such residue of my estate for & during the term of her natural life. & from & after her decease the lawful issue of such surviving niece (if more than one) shall have the whole of the rents, etc., equally between them, share & share alike; & if but one, then such only one shall have & enjoy the whole of such part as is personal, to & for his or her own use & benefit; & to hold so much & such part or parts thereof as are freehold to them & each of them, if more than one, their or his or her heirs & assigns, as tenants in common, & not as joint-tenants; & if but one, then to such one, his or her heirs & assigns for ever. & if all my nieces shall die without issue, then, from & after the decease of the survivor of them, without issue, as aforesaid, I give the whole of such residue to my next male heir of the name of M. to hold to him, his heirs, exors., & administrators, in manner aforesaid."

Two of the trustees were dead; all the nieces were living; two of them had no children, the other had one child, a son G. B., & it being a question what estate these parties severally & respectively took under the will:—Held: in case the will had commenced with the words "all the rents," etc., & the passage before those words had been omitted, the three nieces would have taken estates tail in the freeholds & absolute interests in the leasehold.—MURTHWAITE v. JENKINSON (1824), 2 B. & C. 357; 3 Dow. & Ry. 5097. —— ——.]—Testator, by will made in 1827, bequeathed leasehold estates to a trustee upon trust for his wife for life, & after her decease upon trust to receive the rents & profits thereof, & after payment thereout of all outgoings to pay the annual sum of £60 unto his daughter for her life by two equal half-yearly payments. Upon further trust, in case of the death of his daughter leaving a child or children, to raise & levy out of the premises the sum of £400, & to pay the same to such child or children in manner therein mentioned. After the performance of all the before-mentioned trusts, upon trust to assign the premises, or such part thereof as should remain undisposed of, unto his son absolutely :—Held : the annuity to the daughter was chargeable upon the corpus, & not upon the income of the estate.

5133. "Lands known by the name of D."—Part in adjoining parish—Accessible only through land in parish named.]—Testatrix devised "all that my share & interest in the lands known by the name of D., situate in the parish of K., now in the occupation of E."

The lands known as D. included two small closes in the parish of L., but only accessible from the rest of the lands, which were in the parish of K.; also one close formerly in the same occupation as the other land, but at the date of the will & the death of the testatrix occupied by M. There was no residuary devise:—Held: these three closes passed under the devise.

Although this case is one of more than ordinary difficulty, especially as you have in the subordinate part two inexact descriptions conjoined instead of only one, I think I am bound to hold that the principal subject described by the leading words is, all her interest in that estate which was called by the name of Dyffrydd & the Little Dyffrydd, & the error of description lies in the accessory words, namely, the words descriptive of situation, & the words descriptive of occupation & that the whole passed (LORD SELBORNE).—HARDWICK v. HARDWICK (1873). 5136. —— Five houses in street named—One joined by covered passage.]—Testatrix devised all her messuages, situate in Denmark Court. She had five houses within the court, & another which fronted towards the Strand, & formed one side of a covered passage leading to the place where the five stood, & to the back of which was attached an out-building, abutting on ground within the court. The Vice-Chancellor having decided that the five houses only passed, the Lord Chancellor, on appeal, directed an ejectment to be brought by the heir-at-law against the devisee, &, on a verdict being found for deft., reversed the decision of the ct. below, & made a declaration that the house fronting towards the Strand passed with the other five.—NEWTON v. LUCAS (1836), 1 My. & Cr. 391; 40 E. 5137. "In or near" named street—Four houses in street—Two houses four hundred yards off.]—Devise of "all my messuages situate at, in, or near a street called Snig Hill, in Sheffield, which I lately purchased of the Duke of Norfolk's trustees." Testator had four houses in Sheffield, about 20 yards from Snig Hill, & two houses about 400 yards from it, in a place called Gibraltar Street, also in the town of Sheffield. He purchased all the houses by one conveyance, & redeemed the land tax upon all by one contract. He had no other houses in Sheffield:—Held: the terms "at, in, or near Snig Hill," did not apply to the houses in Gibraltar Street; & there being four houses which answered all the terms of the devise, it must be understood as meant to pass those, & not the two to which only part of the description applied.—DOE d. 5139. "Ground rents in" named road—None owned in road named—Two in streets quarter mile distant.]—A devise of "two improved ground rents in the Queen's Road, Dalston." Testator had no such ground rents, but owned one ground rent issuing in respect of houses in the immediate neighbourhood of the Queen's Road, in the parish of H. ; & another issuing in respect of houses in the parish of S., not in the immediate neighbourhood of the Queen's Road. The houses in H. & S. were about a quarter of a mile out of Dalston :—Held : the ground rents in H. & S. passed under the above description.—TANN v. TANN (1863), 2 New Rep. 412.

5140. Freehold brewery in named street—Malthouse on land two hundred & eighteen feet from street named.]—Testator bequeathed to his son F. all those his freehold brewhouse, buildings, & premises, situate in S. Street, whereon for many years he had carried on the business of brewer, except a site of a portion of the premises on which stood a room used as a counting house ; & also all that piece of land with the old malthouse standing thereon situate near S. Street. Testator had for forty-five years carried on business as a brewer on freehold premises, situate behind certain houses in S. Street. On a plot of land situate about 218 feet from S. Street, he had, upon a piece of building land bought by him some years before his death, built a malthouse & a carpenter's shop :—Held : the malthouse did not pass to F. under the description of all testator's freehold brewhouse, buildings & premises in S. Street.—LAMBERT v. OVERTON (1864), 11 L. T. 503.

5141. Estate in named street—Land partly abutting on street named—Houses fronting on another street.]—A person purchased a piece of land abutting on O. Street on the east & on T. Street on the west. 5142. Reference to houses by numbers in street—Houses indicated not owned by testator—Houses with same numbers owned in another street.]—Testator, who died in 1913, by his will made in 1908, appointed an exor. & directed "my two freehold cottages or tenements with their appurtenances, situated at Trowbridge, known as Nos. 19 & 20 Castle Street," to be sold by auction & the proceeds to be divided between two of his daughters. He also specifically devised his freehold cottage or tenement known as No. 35, The Conigre, Trowbridge, to one of his sons, & his freehold cottage or tenement known as No. 39, Castle Street, Trowbridge, to another daughter. There was no residuary devise. At the date of his will & death testator owned freehold premises known as Nos. 19 & 20, Thomas Street, Trowbridge in addition to No. 35, the Conigre, & No. 39, Castle Street, but Nos. 19 & 20, Castle Street, were not & never had been testator's property :—Held : in the description of Nos. 19 & 20 the words "Castle Street" ought to be rejected as falsa demonstratio merely, & Nos. 19 & 20, Thomas Street passed under the specific devise, testator having no other houses in Trowbridge so numbered. —Re MAYELL, FOLEY v. WOOD, [1913] 2 Ch. 488 ; 83 L. Ademption, generally, see Part XII., Sect. 5, sub-sect. 2, ante.

5157. Property always accompanying testator.]—A devise of the furniture & pictures at the houses at A., B. & C. passes not plate, which testator constantly used, & removed with him when he went from one house to another.—FRANKLYN v. BURLINGTON (EARL) (1705), as reported in Prec. Ch. 251; 24 E. R. 122.

5158. Effect of tortious removal.]—J. devises all his household goods & furniture which should be in his house at R. at his death to his wife, & afterwards going beyond sea, his steward gets the landlord of the house to accept of a surrender of the lease of the house, & removes the goods to another house; & writes an account of this to J., who approves of it. The goods will not pass by the will to the wife; otherwise if they had been removed by fraud to defeat the legacy; or by any tortious act without the privity of testator.—SHAFTSBURY (EARL) v. SHAFTSBURY (COUNTESS) (1716), 2 Vern. 747; 1 Eq. T. 642 ; sub nom. BRUCE v. CURZON HOWE, 19 W. R. 116.

5170. —— —— Furniture stored awaiting transfer.]—Testator bequeathed all his household furniture which should be in his capital messuage at his death, unto trustees upon trust to permit the same to be held & enjoyed as heirlooms with his said messuage by the person entitled to the same messuage under the will. Testator, who died in 1875, was, in 1874, the occupier of a house at Bath, which he had furnished. He ceased to occupy that house in 1874, & removed the furniture with the intention of its being placed in his capital messuage, which was in the occupation of a tenant. The tenant having declined to permit the furniture to be placed therein, it was, in consequence of such refusal, stored in farm buildings belonging to testator, where it was at his death :—Held : the furniture passed under the bequest.—RAWLINSON v. RAWLINSON (1876), 3 Ch. 5171. —— —— Goods at bankers.]—Testatrix by a codicil to her will bequeathed to A., sixth Earl of E. & to his successors, all her plate, & also gave, devised, & bequeathed a leasehold house to him & " to his successors, & to be enjoyed with & to go with the title," & as to all her household furniture, paintings, books, china, & the whole contents of her house, she bequeathed the same to her trustees & exors. upon trust that they should in the first place " select & set aside a collection of the best paintings, statuary, & china for the said Earl of E. & his successors, to be held & settled as heirlooms, & to go with the title," & she authorised them to give to the said Earl or his successors any articles of furniture which they should think fit, & as to all the rest & residue of the contents of her house upon trust for her trustees to select presents for her friends, & directed them to present any portion of the residue of the contents of her house to her cousins if they should think fit, or to sell the same, & the moneys so received to form part of her residuary personal estate, & she directed all the legacies left by her will & codicil to be paid free of legacy duty. Testatrix died possessed of considerable personal estate, which comprised amongst other things a number of articles of jewellery which were at her death in a box at her banker's, which jewellery had been bequeathed to her. It was proved that it had been the practice of testatrix, & also of the former owner, to send such box for safe custody to the bankers when they respectively were away from London :—Held : the box of jewellery passed to the trustees as part of the contents of the house, that being the locality to which the property ought to be ascribed, although jewellery is merely for personal use & is not appropriate to a house.—Re JOHNSTON, COCKERELL v. ESSEX (EARL) (1884), 26 Ch. 5172. —— —— ——.]—Testatrix by her will specifically devised certain jewellery & gave her residue on trust for her nephews & nieces & their children. By a codicil she devised her dwelling-house, No. 13, Esplanade, & bequeathed all her "furniture, plate, linen, china, glass, books, pictures, & household effects of every description. & all other the contents of the said dwelling-house except any articles I may have bequeathed by my said will," to her nephew W. At testatrix's death the contents included (a) certain jewellery, (b) £40 in Bank of England notes & cash, (c) other jewellery, & (d) £50 in Bank of England notes had been deposited in the bank during testatrix's illness without her instructions, although she was consequently told it had been done :—Held : (1) everything in the house passed by the bequest ; (2) the jewellery deposited at the bank was notionally in the house ; (3) the £50 had become part of testatrix's current account & did not pass.—Re LEA, WELLS v. HOLT (1911), 104 L. 5174. —— Removal to locality where property also subject of gift—Property remaining in original locality only passes.]—Testator by his will gave all his pictures, plate, etc., in each of his two mansion houses, Envillehall & Bradgate House, to trustees upon trust to permit the same respectively to go along with & be used & enjoyed by the persons respectively for the time being entitled under the will to the possession of the respective mansion-houses in or about which the said pictures, plate, etc., should be at the time of testator's death. Testator directed an inventory to be made of the pictures, plate, etc., belonging to each of the mansion houses, one copy to be kept by the trustees of the will & the other by the person entitled for the time being to the enjoyment of the same. Enville Hall was testator's principal place of residence, Bradgate House being used by him during the hunting & shooting season. It was testator's custom when he went to Bradgate House to take a quantity of plate from Enville Hall with him, & at the end of his residence at Bradgate House the plate was returned to Enville Hall. The plate taken on these occasions was not always the same. A large quantity of plate which had been taken from Enville Hall was in this way in Bradgate House at the date of testator's death, which took place at Bradgate House. Soon after testator's death the plate was sent back to Enville Hall & kept there. On the construction of the will :—Held : the whole of the plate actually in Bradgate House at the date of testator's death passed to the devisee of that house.—Re STAMFORD (EARL), HALL v. LAMBERT (1906), 22 T. 5175. —— —— —— ——.]—Testator shortly before his death bought a motor car which he kept at his residence in Denbigh. He also owned another residence in Cornwall, & while motoring there he caught a chill & died there, the motor car being at the time of his death at his Cornish residence. By his will he gave to his elder son all his carriages in or about or belonging to his Denbigh house, & to his younger son all his carriages in or about or belonging to his Cornish house :—Held : the motor car was a carriage, & passed to the elder son as "belonging to" the Denbigh house.—Re DENNIS, DENNIS v. DENNIS (1908), 24 T. 5198. —— Gift of contents of desk.]—Testator gave his desk " with the contents thereof " to his nephew J. ; he also gave him a legacy of £200, & made him one of his exors. & residuary legatees ; the desk contained bank notes & coin, a banker's deposit receipt, a cheque to the order of testator, but unindorsed, divers promissory notes, payable to testator or order, also unindorsed, a promissory note payable on demand, & the key of a tin box in which some securities were kept. It was admitted that the bank notes & coin passed to the nephew J., but the residuary legatees contended that the choses in action did not pass :—Held : (1) by the desk & its " contents " testator intended to pass all that was found therein at the time of his death, & the words used were sufficient to pass all the choses in action, including those which were negotiable only after indorsement by the exors.

The exors. are bound, as in the ordinary case of a specific legacy, because, although this is a gift of general things as they exist at the death, yet it is a specific legacy from the moment of the death, & the exors. are bound to do that which is required to get the legacy in, & hand it over to the legatee. Of course they would all be bound, therefore, to put their signatures, or allow one to put his signature, which would be enough, in point of law to enable the legatee to recover upon the promissory notes or the other instruments.

The distinction is, to my mind, just the same as would have prevailed if this desk had contained title deeds, because I should not have held that the title deeds passed for the simple reason that the land to which the title deeds related itself would not have passed, the land would have gone to the devisees under the will ; or, if there had been no devise of land, it would have gone to the heir, & the deeds, in such a case, are the accessories to the title to the land (CHITTY, J.).

5219. —— —— Occupied part of house partitioned off.]—Testator purporting to dispose of "all the rest, residue & remainder of his estates wheresoever & whatsoever," devised to his son D. "all those two cottages or tenements, the one occupied by my son, J., & the other occupied by my granddaughter, together with all the appur tenances thereto belonging." At the date of the will & death of testator a room, originally part of a cottage, but which had several years before the making of the will been partitioned off from the rest of the building, & had a separate entrance, was occupied by J. as a separate dwelling, together with a hovel, part of testator's property. The rest of the building from which the room so occupied by J. had been taken, was in the separate occupation of the devisee, D. There was also a room originally part of another cottage, but from which it had been similarly partitioned off, which, at the date of the will & the death of testator, was occupied by his granddaughter as a separate dwelling, together with an adjoining pantry. The rest of the building from which the room so occupied by the granddaughter had been separated was in the separate occupation of W., as a distinct dwelling. There was also at the same dates a building occupied as a separate dwelling by J. W., which was part of testator's property. All these five dwellings had originally consisted of two cottages only, which had been subdivided as before stated, & were copyhold, to which testator had prior to the date of his will, but subsequent to some of the separations before mentioned, been admitted by the description of "all those two customary or copyhold messuages, cottages or tenements." In ejectment by the heir-at-law to recover the portions of the property other than those in the actual occupation of J. & the granddaughter:—Held: the rooms occupied by J. & the granddaughter respectively fulfilled the terms of the devise, & these rooms only, & not the whole of the cottages, of which they had formerly been part, passed to the devisee.—DOE d. 5220. —— —— —— Description otherwise incorrect.]—Testator by his will devised to his wife "for her use & enjoyment during her natural life or widowhood, all that part of the dwelling house in Boskednan, in the parish of G., now in the occupation of R. B., containing a kitchen & pantry behind same, & two bedrooms." In a subsequent clause of the will testator devised to his son R. "the western part of all that my dwelling-house in Boskednan aforesaid, now in the occupation of H. L., consisting of a kitchen, dairy, & chamber." The subject-matter of the will had been originally erected as one house, having a single roof, but had been afterwards divided by testator into two habitations, each of which was let to a separate tenant. The description in the devise of the dwelling occupied by R. B. was incorrect, inasmuch as the pantry was not in fact behind the kitchen, but behind the parlour, a room not mentioned in the clause, & there were three bedrooms. The description of the premises devised in the second clause to R. was, however, correct:—Held: the devise to the wife was of such part of the whole building as formed the separate tenement occupied by R. B., & not merely a portion of that tenement, & the misdescription of the position & number of the rooms was mere falsa demonstratio which should be rejected, & did not cut down the preceding devise.—WELLINGTON v. SHEPHERD (1872), 27 L. 5222. —— Other lands under same title with messuage.]—Testator being seised by the same title of a messuage of 19 acres of land, including F. M., in the parish of M. R., which parish consists of three townships, M. R., B., & H. R.; & having other property in H. R., & nowhere else; & the messuage in B. with two of the 19 acres there, being in the occupation of T. W., & the rest of the 19 acres being partly in the occupation of other tenants, & partly in his own; devised "all his messuage, with all lands, hereditaments, & appurtenances thereto belonging, situate in "B., in the parish of M. R., now in the occupation of T. W., except F. M.":—Held: the devise was not confined to lands in B., then occupied by T. W., but extended to all the lands in B. held under the same title with the messuage; & the words "now in the occupation of T. W." were to be transposed & applied to the messuage then occupied by T. W. according to the fact; which transposition would render the whole consistent: whereas without it, the exception of the F. M. was nugatory, as that never had been in the occupation of T. W. It was no objection to this construction that a residuary clause, giving all other testator's real estate in M. R. would have nothing to operate upon; the F. M. & the property in the township of H. R., being specifically devised in the same clause.—MARSHALL v. HOPKINS (1812), 15 East, 309; 104 E. R. 861.

5225. —— Misdescription of tenure.]—J. C. having devised "all his freehold & copyhold estate" to S. B. for life, & then to W. C. for life, with power to devise same, W. C., who died in the lifetime of S. B., by his will, devised "all that my copyhold messuages, cottages, lands & hereditaments in the occupation of . . . S. B. . . . & to which I am entitled from & after her decease, that is to say, the house, cottages & outbuildings & one moiety . . . of the lands & hereditaments" to E. D., etc.; & if she died without issue devised "all & singular the messuages, cottages, moiety of land & hereditaments so devised" to her brothers & sisters; & as to & concerning "all that the other moiety of the lands, hereditaments & premises" devised them to such brothers & sisters; & as to & concerning "all that my other copyhold lands & tenements . . . adjoining to the last-mentioned lands & hereditaments now also in the occupation of S. B.," after the decease of A. C. to E. D., etc.; & by his codicil to the will, reciting that he had by his will devised "all my copyhold messuages, cottages, lands & hereditaments" to such brothers & sisters, restrained the devise to the full blood. At the date of the will S. B. was in possession of all the property originally devised by J. C., & it consisted of a copyhold house, formed by S. B. out of what had been three cottages, 18½ acres of copyhold land, a freehold cottage, & half an acre of freehold land, such freehold cottage standing on the freehold land, which was bounded, & almost surrounded by the copyhold property :—Held: the freehold passed by the devise.—COSBY v. MILLINGTON (1869), 38 L. 5226. —— With description of place—Lands occupied by another person outside place.]—HARDWICK v. HARDWICK, No. 5133, ante.

5227. —— —— Lands so occupied outside place.]—(1) Testator devised all his lands "situated at or within D., in the occupation of J." Testator was seised of two farms, both in the occupation of J. The greater part of each of the farms was within the parish of D., but three closes of one & one close of the other were respectively situate in an adjoining parish. In each case the portion which was not in the parish of D. immediately adjoined the remainder of the farm, & was only separated from it by the parish boundary, which was, in the one case, a high road, & in the other, a fence. In the latter case the parish church of D. was only a few yards distant from the fence :—Held: the devise comprised the four closes adjoining the parish of D.

(2) Testator also devised all his land "situate at G., in the occupation of S." :—Held: this devise did not include land situate in G., but in the occupation of J.—HOMER v. HOMER (1878), 8 Ch. D. 758; 47 L. J. Ch. 635; 39 L. T. 3; 27 W. R. 101, C. A.

A close in the parish of D., heretofore arable & part of C. farm & occupied with it by the lessee thereof, but for thirty-three years past sown with acorns, & occupied by the owner, & excepted out of two leases of C. farm, one prior, the other posterior to the date of the devise, passes by the devise as parcel of C. farm.—DOWN v. DOWN (1817), 7 Taunt. 343; 1 Moore, C. 5234. Mistake in description—Part in occupation of tenant.]—A copyholder surrenders "his copyhold cottage, with a croft adjoining, & a common right, etc., belonging to same; "all which premises, were then in his own possession"; & on the same day he devises "all his copyhold cottage & premises then in his own possession"; in fact the croft, between which & the cottage & garden there was only a gooseberry hedge, was in the actual occupation of a tenant at the time:—Held: the whole passed under the description of "all his copyhold cottage & premises"; the words "then in his own possession" being merely a mistaken description, following the mistake of the surrender, which mentions the croft with the rest as then being in his possession.—GOODRIGHT d. LAMB v. PEARS (1809), 11 East, 58; 103 E. R. 925.

5235. —— —— ——.]—S. devised to his wife during widowhood "my residence called S. house & premises thereto as same are now occupied by me." Some years before making this devise he had let to two of his sons for the purposes of their business, an office standing in the yard of S. house & the stable & coach house belonging to the house, except a room on the first floor of the coach house to which the only access was through the house, & the sons were in occupation till his death:—Held: the devise included the room over the coach house, but did not include the rest of the stable & coach house nor the office, for the property which was in testator's own occupation answered the whole of the description, & that being so, the ct. could not enter into the question of inconvenience, & reject the reference to occupation as falsa demonstratio.—Re SEAL, SEAL v. TAYLOR, [1894] 1 Ch. 316; 63 L. Testator devised "all his freehold estates at or near R., in the parish of H.," which was a complete & correct description of the property intended to pass. The context indicated an intention to pass the whole of such estate:—Held: the gift was not narrowed by the erroneous addition of the words, "& now in my own occupation."—WHITE v. BIRCH (1867), 36 L. 5243. —— —— Property also described by occupation.]—Testator having several children, & being possessed of eight houses in N., devised six of them amongst his children, including deft., who was his heir-at-law; & also devised as follows: "All that messuage, etc., which I some time since purchased of B. S., situate at N. aforesaid, being in the occupation of ——." Also another messuage in N. aforesaid. The messuage in question was not purchased of B. S., but it had been commonly called B. 5244. —— —— ——.]—In 1861 testator specifically devised "all that my messuage farm lands & hereditaments in B. in the county of Essex now in the occupation of G. purchased by me of T." Testator had a farm in B. called "Welham's Farm," which was compounded of two small farms purchased by him of T. in 1831, & of another adjoining small farm & a field, both purchased by him in the same year of C. At the date of his will & of his death in 1862 the whole of the lands so purchased were in the occupation of G., who farmed them as one holding:—Held: the words "purchased by me of T.," were merely explanatory comment, not defining or restricting the one definite entity with which testator was dealing—namely, the farm in the occupation of G.—& must be disregarded; & the whole of "Welham's Farm" passed to the specific devisee.—NORMAN 5247. " Moiety of her late father's messuages " —Property descending through niece.]—A. B., seised of a moiety of several estates, the whole of which had been her father's (but of which she took one part as heir of her father, & the remainder as heir of a niece, her father's granddaughter), devised " all her moiety of & in all her late father's messuages," etc. :—Held : the devisee took, as well the estates which descended from the niece, as those which descended immediately from testatrix's father.—DOE d. 5248. Purchased of or received from—Annuity so purchased larger than amount stated.]—Testator, by his will, gave " an annuity of £21 per annum, which I purchased of & receive from Mr. J. G." Testator had no annuity of that amount, but he had an annuity of £46, which he had purchased from J. G., & he insured J. G.'s life for the amount of the purchase-money, the yearly premium on which amounted to £25, which left a clear sum of £21, as representing the beneficial interest in the annuity :—Held : the entire annuity of £46 per annum passed by the above bequest.—PURCHASE v. SHALLIS (1850), 2 H. & Tw. 354 ; 19 L. 5250. " By inheritance "—Property received by deed of gift.]—Testator, by a will made after Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), came into operation, devised to trustees for 500 years all his freehold & copyhold hereditaments in the county of D. which had or might thereafter come into his possession " by inheritance " from his father, whose heir he was. Among testator's property in the county of D., when he made his will, were one estate devised to him by his father before above Act came into operation & another which had been conveyed to him by his father by a deed of gift, & into the possession of which he entered in his father's lifetime :—Held : the latter estate was not subject to the trusts of the term, though without it they could not be fully performed as regarded the amounts directed to be raised under them.—WILKINSON v. BEWICKE (1853), 3 De G. 5251. " Allotment awarded by commissioners " —Other property intended to pass.]—H., in 1800, purchased a field called " Tip Brook Close," which was copyhold & an old inclosure. In the same year fourteen acres were allotted to him by the Comrs. under an Inclosure Act. Testator divided the allotment. One piece, containing rather more than four acres, he converted into pasture, & made a communication between it & the old inclosure by a short passage, & from thence till his death he occupied & used the whole as one close of sward land, & called it " Tip." By his will, in 1825, he devised to his son James " all that piece or parcel of sward land in Raund's Nether Field, called ' Tip Close,' containing six acres, more or less being part of an allotment awarded by the Comrs. to me at the time of the inclosure of Raund's Field " :—Held : there was evidence to go to the jury, that not only the allotted piece, but also the old inclosure, was intended to pass under the devise.—HARRISON v. HYDE (1859), 4 H. & N. 805 ; 29 L. 5253. " Received in exchange from S."—Further description by occupation—Part of property exchanged no longer so occupied.]—Testator devised to his granddaughter a plot of freehold land by the description of " the portion of meadow land received by me in exchange from S.," & other plots to the same granddaughter, describing them by reference to the tenants in whose occupation they then were. Portion of the plot of land which testator had acquired by exchange from S., & of certain of the plots which had been in the occupation of the several tenants named in the descriptions were, at the date of the will, under contract for sale to a railway co. The co. had taken possession before the date of the will, but the conveyance was not completed until after testator's death :—Held : as there remained lands to answer the description in the will at the time of its date, such lands alone passed under the devises, & the purchase-money paid by the railway co. to the trustee of testator's will ought to have been paid to pltf., the residuary devisee & legatee.—Re JACKSON, WILSON v. DONALD (1881), 44 L. The daughter, by her will, which was expressed to be signed & sealed only, but which was attested by three witnesses, gave several pecuniary legacies, & directed them to be paid out of the moneys invested in her name in the 4 per cent. govt. securities. The daughter died unmarried. She had no 4 per cents. standing in her name, nor was there any property to satisfy the legacies, except the 3 per cents. standing in the names of the trustees of her father's will :—Held : the power was not confined to the daughter's children, but was general ; & her will was a due execution of it.—MACKINLEY v. SISON (1837), 8 Sim. 561 ; 1 Jur.

Testatrix died in the same year, & had not at the date of the will, or at her death, any stock whatever standing in the bank books. It appeared, however, from extrinsic evidence, that in 1840 she had had a sum of £1,000 Bank annuities standing in her name, which she sold out & lent to A. B., he paying her, down to her death, a sum equal to the dividends :—Held : the legatees were entitled to a sum equal to the value of £1,000 consols at her death.—LINDGREN v. LINDGREN (1846), 9 Beav. 358 ; 15 L. 5280. —— Rentes directed to be purchased—Not transferred.]—In June, testator directed his bankers to purchase 1,127 francs French Rentes for him. They entered the purchase in their books, but never transferred the amount into testator's name ; they had, however, sufficient Rentes to answer it, which they considered they held for testator. In July following testator bequeathed "the annual Rente of 1,127 francs, inscribed in his name in the book of the Public Debt of France," to A. B. :—Held : A. B. was entitled to 1,127 Rentes, although testator had none in his name, & although, on the balance of previous transactions in Rentes with his banker, he was entitled only to 708 francs in Rentes.—ELLIS v. EDEN (NO. 2) (1858), 25 Beav. 482 ; 53 E. 5282. —— Consols—Possessed of new 3 per cents.—No Consols.]—Testator bequeathed to each of his six cousins "£3,000 3 per cent. Consols, part of that sum standing in his name in the said funds." Testator's estate at the time of his death was insufficient to satisfy the whole of the legacies. Amongst other property he was entitled to £11,000 New 3 per cent. Annuities, but to no Consols or any other stock :—Held : the legatees were entitled to the £11,000 stock in equal shares. —BURBEY v. BURBEY (1867), 15 L. T. 501 ; 15 W. R. 479.

5283. All moneys funded for her by A.—Amount specified—Larger amount funded by A.]—Testatrix, having £115 long annuities standing in her name at her death, of which £65 like annuities had been purchased for her by T. B., bequeathed her residuary estate to trustees, to be invested or continued by them in the public funds or at interest, the stocks, funds or securities to be varied at discretion, in trust to pay certain annuities out of the interest, dividends, etc., &, subject thereto, to pay the income of the said trust moneys, stocks, funds & securities to S. N. for life : &, subject thereto, she gave all the residue of her estate to the trustees absolutely. By a codicil she gave all the money funded by T. B. in her name in the long annuities (which she mentioned to be £50 per annum) to C. D. after S. N.'s death :—Held : that £50 of the long annuities were specificially bequeathed to C. 5284. Amalgamation of companies—Before date of will—Original company wrongly described.]—By her will, made in 1902, testatrix bequeathed to two legatees equally "all my shares in the W. & S. Banking Co." There was no bank of that name in existence at the date of the will, or at the death of testatrix in 1906, but for some years prior to 1899 testatrix had been the possessor of twenty-five shares in the S. & W. Banking Co. The undertaking of this bank was amalgamated with Barclay & Co., Ltd., as from July 1, 1899, & testatrix received twenty-five shares in Barclay & Co., Ltd., in exchange for her shares in the absorbed bank. At the date of her death testatrix still held the twenty-five shares in Barclay & Co., & had no other bank shares. Evidence was admitted showing the dealings of testatrix with the shares & her knowledge of the amalgamation : —Held : the twenty-five shares in Barclay & Co. passed to the specific legatees, & did not fall into the residue.—Re JAMESON, KING v. WINN, [1908] 2 Ch. 111 ; 77 L. There was no co. of that name in existence at the date of the will nor at the death of testatrix in 1911, but for some years prior to 1900 testatrix had held shares in the A. co., & in that year the W. co. was amalgamated with the A. co., testatrix receiving shares in the latter co. in exchange for her shares in the absorbed co., which she still held at the date of her death :—Held : the shares in the A. co. did not pass to the specific legatee, but fell into the residue.—Re ATLAY, ATLAY v. ATLAY (1912), 56 Sol. 5293. Due from legatee's late husband—Debt in fact owing to testator's firm.]—Testator bequeathed a debt which he described as due to him from the legatee's late husband. At the date of the will & at the time of testator's death the estate of the legatee's husband was indebted to a firm in which testator was a partner, & a portion of this debt consisted of a sum for which, although originally a debt due to the firm, the husband had given a promissory note to testator alone ; against this note the Statute of Limitations had run, & it was barred by the certificate of the husband, who had become bkpt. It had, however, been included in a subsequent account between him & the firm as a debt to the firm, & was acknowledged by him to be due :—Held : there was not anything strictly answering the description contained in the bequest, & it must be taken to apply to testator's interest in the whole debt due to the firm.—MAYBERY v. BROOKING (1855), 7 De G. At the date of the will & at the time of testator's death there was due to him from B. a sum of £50, for which B. had given testator his promissory note. There was also due to testator from a partnership firm consisting of B. & G. a sum of £300, for which B. & G. had given testator their joint promissory note, & a sum of £2,300, for which B. & G. had given him their joint & several promissory notes :—Held : there being a private debt of B. which satisfied the words of the bequest & release, those words could not be construed as including the partnership debts.—Re BENNETT, Ex p. KIRK (1877), 5 Ch. "Owing to her from my late husband's estate"—Debts not enforceable—Acknowledgment by I.O.U.]—Testatrix bequeathed to her grandniece "the sum of £300 in addition to the sums owing to her from my late husband's estate." The will contained no direction to pay debts. There were no sums legally owing to the grandniece from the husband's estate, but there were two sums of £500 for which the husband (as testatrix knew) had given her an I.O.U. & promissory note, which, however, were not enforceable for want of consideration. Testatrix was universal devisee & legatee under her husband's will :—Held : having regard to the surrounding circumstances, the intention of testatrix was to include the two sums in question in the bequest.—Re ROWE, PIKE v. HAMLYN, [1898] 1 Ch. 153 ; 67 L. fund to him during his life. She had also, in the same event, a general power to appoint by will the capital of the fund as she should think fit. By her will she appointed out of the capital of the fund several sums, including £1,100 to D. "in satisfaction of a debt to that amount due from me to her." & she further appointed that (subject as aforesaid) the trustees should pay the whole of the income of the fund to her husband during his life. The husband survived her. There was in fact no debt due from her to D., but there was a debt of £1,100 due from her husband to D., & the evidence satisfied the ct. that, in the appointment of the £1,100, she intended to refer to that debt. She had at her death separate property applicable to the payment of her debts, but that property was insufficient for the purpose by more than £1,100. Some time after her death the husband paid the debt to D.:—Held: the appointment had not failed, but was effective, & the £1,100 must be applied in payment of the debts of the testatrix.—Re HODGSON, DARLEY v. HODGSON, [1899] 1 Ch. 666; 68 L. 5298. "All debts" owing to testator—Money payable under guarantee.]—Testator, Nov. 16, 1907, made certain bequests & the following—namely: "I bequeath to my nephew J. £2,000, & I forgive the said J. all debts owing to me from him up to the time of my decease, & all interest & arrears of interest thereon, & I bequeath to him the same & all documents which I shall hold by way of security for the same, but upon condition that he shall not be entitled to receive or retain the amount that shall be due from me to him up to the date of my death whether for goods sold or upon any other account." At the date of the will testator held various promissory notes given to him by his nephew, some of which were barred by the Statute of Limitations, but one of which was not—namely, a note for £1,000. In 1904 the nephew had borrowed money from his bank, & testator had deposited with the bankers certain securities of his own to secure the advances to his nephew, & a few days after he entered into a guarantee which was of a continuing nature & guaranteed to the bank all sums due by his nephew to the bank, provided that testator's liability should be limited to £4,000. Some years after a second guarantee, substantially to the same effect, was given, the reason for giving it appearing to be that testator placed some additional security with the bank to cover his liability. Testator died on July 17, 1911. At his death there was money due from the nephew to the bank, & the latter guarantee was still subsisting. The question raised by the summons was whether upon the true construction of the will the clause could be construed as a gift to the nephew of £4,000 in aid of the money due by the nephew to the bank:—Held: the words "all debts" did not include any equitable right which the surety may have had at the death to come into equity to obtain indemnity, & therefore the clause in the will did not extend to any moneys which testator's estate might be called upon to pay to the bank under the guarantee.—Re MITCHELL, FREELOVE v. MITCHELL, [1913] 1 Ch. 201; 82 L. 5299. Meaning of "appurtenances."] — The word "appurtenances" in a devise is not confined to the legal meaning of the word; & that which seems to be appurtenant to a messuage devised shall pass with the messuage, without the word "appurtenances," such appearing to be the intention of testator; though he may have used the word "appurtenances" in other parts of his will when speaking of a messuage.—DOE d. 5311. ——.]—In 1814 premises were purchased by testator, which in the conveyance to him were described as containing by estimation 3 acres 5 perches, & were of that quantity, or nearly so. They then consisted of a field, an orchard, & a house & garden, & so remained until 1838, when the house & garden, & south part of the field, were let. Testator then made a fence, which prevented all communication between the north & south parts of the field; & the tenant afterwards subdivided the south field into two. The premises continued in this condition until testator's death; he occupying the north field & orchard, & the tenant holding the residue. The north field was at the north corner of the town of M., & opposite a pond. In 1840 testator devised "all that my messuage or dwelling-houses, with the outbuildings, garden, orchard & appurtenances thereto belonging," occupied by A. B., "situate on the east side of the town of M.," "& a close of land adjoining, being the close at the north corner of the town of M., "& opposite the pond, & containing, with the garden & orchard, 3 acres, 5 perches, more or less," to his daughter in fee. By codicil in 1841, after reciting that he had given to his daughter "a close situate at" M., "being the close at the north corner of the town of M.," "& opposite the pond, & containing," etc., as in the will, "& now in my occupation," he proceeded: "Now I do hereby revoke," etc., the devise "of the close to my daughter"; & devised "the same close with the appurtenances" to another daughter. On a question whether the two south fields passed by the codicil:—Held: the description by testator's occupation was clear, the description by quantity was uncertain, & the north field only so passed.—DOE d. By his will he devised one house, & the appurtenances thereunto belonging, to B. & the other to C., in similar terms. During A.'s ownership of both, the entrance from the high road to the principal door of the house afterwards devised to B., was by a set out carriage drive or sweep entering from a high road, passing immediately in front of the house afterwards devised to C., to B.'s door, & then returning round an oval garden in front of C.'s house, but at a greater distance from it, to the same point of the entrance. B.'s house had a coach house opening only into the high road, & a back entrance into same. After A.'s death C. made a fence across so much of the carriage drive as passed immediately in front of his house & the oval garden, leaving the further way to B.'s front door by the same carriage drive open. B. brought trespass claiming the way as appurtenant to his house & garden:—Held: the way, as used in A.'s time, during the unity of ownership in him, immediately in front of C.'s house, did not pass to B. with the house devised to him, under the word "appurtenances" in A.'s will.—PHEYSEY v. VICARY (1847), 16 M. & W. 484; 8 L. Testator had purchased a piece of land, of which these plots were part, subsequently to the time when he became possessed of the land on which the houses stood; that all the houses but one were built at the time of the purchase of the piece of land; testator, after the purchase, allotted small plots of this land to the occupiers of the houses already built, & also a plot to a house which he built subsequently. The plots of ground allotted were detached from the houses, with the exception of one which immediately adjoined. No rent appeared to have been paid for these plots before the death of testator:—Held: these plots were allotted to the tenants of the houses, as gardens going with the houses, & thus passed under the word "appurtenances" to the devisees of the houses.—DOE d. At the date of her will testatrix was seised of various freehold hereditaments usually known as the West Cliff or the West Cliff estate, which included, besides eight dwelling-houses which had been previously let as lodging houses, one of which was then in testatrix's occupation, a piece of land which had been demised on a building lease, on which a dwelling-house had been erected, & was then let to a tenant; two houses in the course of building, four fields, a private road, a piece of land, & another plot of ground, on which a church was being erected. But in a will, if the circumstances & context show that land was meant to pass as appurtenant, the word is flexible enough to carry such land. In ascertaining such intent, as between a cestui que trust under a devise in trust & the heir, it is material that the whole land, including that claimed as appurtenant, is comprised in the devise to the trustee. In 1885 a lease of a mansion house was granted to the husband of a sister of the present tenant for life, who was then an infant, by the trustees of the settlement under the powers thereof & shortly before the termination of such lease in 1890 the altar stone & relics were removed by another sister of the tenant for life, with the approval & by the direction of the lessee & his wife, & handed over to the successor of the bishop who had consecrated the altar stone. At the time of granting the lease, which operated by way of revocation of uses & new appointment, the mansion house & appurtenances were in the charge of caretakers, whose expenses were charged against the tenant for life. articles so removed, defts. contended that, the licence, to use the chapel for mass having been withdrawn, the altar stone was by the law or custom of their church properly given up to the bishop, to whom it belonged as the successor of him who had consecrated it, or else that the altar stone, as well as, in any case, the relics had passed to one of defts. as personal chattels by the will of a former tenant for life under a bequest of all her "furniture & articles of household use or ornament" in or about the mansion house, & at all events pltf. had, at the time of the removal neither title to nor possession of the articles so as to enable him to maintain the action:—Held: even if the former tenant for life under whose will defts. claimed that the articles had passed had been entitled to them so as to be able to dispose of them by will, which was at least doubtful, they did not under the circumstances of the case pass under the bequest referred to.—PETRE v. FERRERS (1891), 61 L. Testator died possessed of a large & valuable collection of orchids, which were kept outside the curtilage of his dwelling-house. It was proved that from time to time some of the plants were brought into the dwelling-house for ornament, & such plants were from time to time replaced by others. The orchids were sold for £3,271:—Held: an inquiry must be directed as to what plants were from time to time used for ornament, & testator's widow was entitled to the proceeds of the sale of such plants.—Re OWEN, PEAT v. OWEN (1898), 78 L. Drawings.]—Testator made a specific bequest of "all his furniture, plate, plated goods, linen, glass, china, books, manuscripts, pictures, prints, drawings, articles of virtu, & all other articles of personal, domestic, or household use or ornament," & he also made a bequest of his residuary estate. At his death he had a large number of original drawings which had been made by himself. Some were framed & hung on the walls of his house, but the bulk of them were stored in a chest:—Held: testator intended to pass under the specific bequest the drawings used as household ornaments & under the residuary bequest those stored in the chest.—Re DU MAURIER, MILLAR v. COLES (1916), 32 T. C. "Books."

5330. Bound manuscript notes of physician.]—(1) Testator, having three places of residence at A., B. & C., bequeathed the one at A. to his nephew; & also "all his carriages, horses, implements & his live & dead stock & chattels" in & about the house & premises at A.; "& also his household goods & furniture, pictures, plate, linen, china, liquors of all sorts & brewing vessels, & likewise his watches & personal ornaments":—Held: the household goods, furniture, etc., at B. & C. passed by the bequest; but qu.: whether a bust would pass under the latter words, quære?

(2) Manuscript notes of a physician, of his attendance on a patient, & which were bound up in volumes:—Held: to pass under a bequest of "all & every my books in & about my house" at A.

(3) A pocket book & a case of instruments, usually carried about the person, of testator:—Held: not to pass under the words "personal ornaments"; but qu.: whether a gold pencil case, toothpick case, lip-salve box & eyeglass, similarly circumstanced, would pass.—WILLIS v. CURTOIS (1838), 1 Beav. 189; 8 L. 5332. Manuscript log book of ship.]—The manuscript log book of H.M.S. Victory passed under a bequest of "one half of all the rest of my books" to each of testator's two sons.—Re BARRATT, BARRATT v. COATES (1915), 31 T. L. R. 502, C. A.

D. Business.

5333. "Business"—Land on which shop stands.]—Testator devised to his wife "all my land & shop, stock in trade business, & everything that I have," & after his wife's death, he "willed & bequeathed the business to his son, for his sole use & benefit; but with an earnest request to do all in his power to assist those of testator's children who might require it"; & "all the rest of his property which might remain after his wife's death, he gave to his exors. in trust for his daughter":—Held: the son did not take under the word "business" the land upon which the shop was built, in which the business was carried on.—DOE d. PAGE v. PAGE (1851), 17 L. T. O. S. 123.

5334. Partnership debt.]—Testator by his will desired that his exor. might be allowed a year for converting his "proportion of capital invested in the business he was then carrying on with H." into cash, & that such cash might be paid over as realised, with the exception of certain special bequests thereinafter mentioned, to the Charity Comrs. to be invested; & he desired that all shares of which he might die possessed might be transferred into the names of the Comrs., without being sold, the interest to be paid by them to A. for life. Testator directed that, after the death of A., sufficient of the property so invested by the Comrs. should be converted by them & paid over to a number of charities, naming the sum to be given to each. Testator then requested his exors. would pay, as soon as conveniently might be after his decease, "out of the capital employed in the business," to the persons mentioned, certain sums, naming twenty-two legatees, & sums amounting together to about £800.

At the date of the will testator was in partnership with H., but before his death the business failed, & a composition was paid, mainly by testator. At his death the partnership assets were outstanding, & testator's "proportion of capital" consisted of half of these assets, after deducting the debts, one of which was a debt of £2,649, due to himself:—Held: the words "capital invested in the business" comprised all that was coming to testator from his partner's estate, inclusive of the debt.—BEVAN v. A.-G. (1863), 4 Giff. 361; 2 New Rep. 52; 9 L. T. 221; 9 Jur. N. S. 1099; 66 E. R. 746.

5335. —— ——.]—B. bequeathed all his "share, right, & interest" in the goodwill of a partnership business, & in the partnership real & personal estate, to his son, upon trusts for the benefit of testator's wife and children:—Held: a debt due to B. from the partnership, & on which he was receiving interest, did not pass by the trust bequest, but formed part of testator's residuary estate.—Re BEARD, SIMPSON v. BEARD (1888), 57 L. 5338. —— ——.]—Testator bequeathed his business & plant at D.-street to X., his brother, & Y., his manager, in equal parts, & the will proceeded: "I will that they pay Miss A. £10 per week during her life":—Held: the effect of the bequest was to give the house, bank balance, & book debts to the legatees, & they were bound to pay the £10 per week out of the assets, but were not personally liable.—Re HAWKINS, HAWKINS v. ARGENT (1913), 109 L. T. 969.

5339. —— Undrawn capital & profits. Testator carried on the business of a solr. with C. under partnership articles, C. being the active partner. The capital was a fixed sum, the profits to be divided equally after C. had taken £400 a year. Accounts were submitted annually to the partners, but were not signed by them. In these circumstances testator made his will whereby he gave to C. all his share & interest in the business conditional on his acting as solr. to his estate free of charge. At his death moneys were standing to the credit of testator's capital account, & there were undrawn profits:—Held: as goodwill had been held in such a business to be practically non-existent to include that only would be to give no effect to the gift, & accordingly having regard to the facts known to testator, his intention was that the gift should pass both the share of capital & the undrawn profits.—Re BARFIELD, GOODMAN v. CHILD (1901), 84 L. T. 28.

5341. —— Freehold of shop.]—Testator devised & bequeathed his whole property to trustees upon trust to invest such part as they should think fit in his business, & carry on the same till his son should attain the age of twenty-one years, & out of the profits to pay his widow the yearly sum of £200 so long as she should remain a widow; & he directed the trustees, when his son should attain twenty-one, to transfer the business to the son. He then gave certain legacies to his other children, & provided that all his personal estate not required for the business should be continued in its then state of investment or altered at the discretion of the trustees, & the proceeds applied for the same purposes as the capital employed in the business. The business was carried on in a freehold shop:—Held: the direction to transfer the business did not pass the freehold shop, & the residuary gift carried the surplus profits of the business during the minority of the son.—Re HENTON, HENTON v. HENTON (1882), 30 W. 5345. —— Old barges accepted in part payment for new.]—Testator, who was a barge builder, specifically bequeathed to his son his business "together with all & singular his stock-in-trade as a barge builder." It is a custom in testator's trade for a barge builder when selling a new barge to accept an old barge in part payment, & to repair such old barge & let the same out on hire. At testator's decease there were five old barges belonging to him which had been thus acquired, & were thus let out on hire:—Held: these barges formed part of testator's stock-in-trade as a barge builder & passed under the specific bequest.—Re RICHARDSON, RICHARDSON v. PILLINER (1881), 50 L. J. Ch. 488; 44 L. T. 404.

5346. "Plant"—Stock-in-trade.]—Testator by his will "gave & bequeathed unto his foreman B. the goodwill of his business in Aldersgate Street, & also the plant & £1,000 sterling for his use & benefit." Testator had been a wholesale clothier in London, & at the time of his death was possessed of stock-in-trade, ready-made clothes, cloth & other materials, household furniture, etc.:—Held: the word "plant" did not embrace the stock-in-trade, ready-made clothes, cloth & other similar materials, & consequently they did not pass to the legatee.—BLAKE v. SHAW (1860), John. 732; 2 L. T. 84; 8 W. R. 410; 70 E. R. 615.

5349. "Profits of commercial undertakings"—Debentures.]—Testator, who held shares in cos. & debentures issued by them as security for loans from him, & was also a partner in a commercial firm, made a gift of "one-fifth share of the net profits in all my commercial undertakings, being" the cos. & firm in question:—Held: the legatee was entitled to one-fifth of the shares, though not to any debentures; but as regarded the partnership he was only entitled to receive one-fifth of the net profits which would have otherwise have been paid to the exors. of testator, so long as the partnership business was carried on.—Re LAWES-WITTEWRONGE, MAURICE v. BENNETT, [1915] 1 Ch. 408; 84 L. At the date of his death there were two large sums of money standing to his credit in two separate banks, with regard to one of which there was a large sum due by way of overdraft in excess of the account:—Held: the two funds passed to the legatees of the business as business assets.—Re BEECHAM (SIR), WOOLLEY v. BEECHAM (1919), 63 Sol. E. Effects.

(a) In General.

5351. Term of general import—Equivalent to "property" or "worldly substance."]—The word "effects" in a will equivalent to "property" or "wordly substance."—CAMPBELL v. PRESCOTT (1808), 15 Ves. 500; 33 E. R. 844.

5352. Unless used in restricted sense.] (1) Testator, after giving at the commencement of his will various pecuniary legacies, & bequeathing all the rest & residue of his ready money, securities for money, & moneys in the funds, to trustees, upon certain trusts, concluded his will as follows: "& I do further give & bequeath to my said wife all my jewels, plate, linen, china, carriages, wines, & other goods, chattels & effects whatsoever, as her own goods & chattels for ever; & I do hereby constitute & appoint her, my said wife, sole extrix. of this my will":—Held: this clause carried the residue of testator's property to the wife.

(2) Although the words "goods, chattels, & effects," may frequently be considered as having been used by testator in a restricted sense, yet primâ facie, their import is general; & there are good grounds for considering them as used in a general sense, either where they are not placed in connection with words of locality or where they follow the enumeration of specific articles, or where there are no expressions in the will showing a doubt in testator's mind as to their comprehensiveness, or where the bequest in which they are contained is followed up by the appointment of an exor.

5353. What is included—Personal estate.]—The meaning of the word "effects" is in common parlance confined to personal things, & it has been judicially decided to bear that meaning unless the context shows testator used it in a more comprehensive sense (PARKE, B.).—DOE d. HAW v. EARLES (1846), 15 M. & W. 450; 16 L. J. Ex. 242; 8 L. T. O. S. 538; 153 E. R. 926.

But it is frequently used in a restricted sense, meaning "goods & movables," as in the common expression of "furniture & effects." In every case the ct. has to collect from the context the particular sense in which testator has intended to use it (LEACH, V.-C.).—MICHELL v. MICHELL (1820), 5 Madd. 69; 56 E. R. 821.

But in case his wife should not marry again, then testator bequeathed to her all & every his personal estate & effects whatsoever for her life, & the same to be equally divided amongst such of his children as should be living at her decease, share & share alike:—Held: the first clause in the will was not intended to be

J. O. S. Ch. 209; 38 E. R. 185.

5360. —— Whether carrying residue.]—Testator gave certain specific property, the lease of premises occupied by him in his trade, & effects, to his wife for life, to be accepted by her subject to payment of debts, etc., & gave certain real estate to his exors. on trust to sell, the proceeds to form part of his residuary estate; & as to all the rest & residue of his estate, of whatever nature etc., to his next heirs therein equally. Upon the question whether the word "effects" included the residue:—Held: it did not.—HOWSE v. SEAGOE (1854), 2 W. R. 597.

5361. —— —— Money arising from sale of effects.]—Testator, in addition to specific bequests, gave to A., the only legatee named in the will, "also any money that may result from the sale of my effects after paying the few small debts that I owe":—Held: not to carry the residue.—In the Goods of O'LOUGHLIN (1870), L. R. 2 P. & D. 102; 39 L. J. P. & M. 53; 18 W. R. 902.

5362. —— Right of cutting timber.]—H. was a Spanish possession, in which British subjects had the right by treaty of cutting timber. The Spaniards withdrew from the country in 1798. In 1862 it was finally annexed to the British dominions by proclamation, but grants of land were made by the Crown as early as 1817. This was evidence that the Crown had assumed territorial dominion in H. as early as that year. A British settler by his will dated in 1779 devised "all my effects of whatever kind soever I may have in H." It was proved that the devisees under the will had taken full possession of the land between the retirement of the Spaniards & the assumption of territorial sovereignty by the British Crown, & that such possession had been continued by them & their assignees thenceforward:—Held: these words would pass the privilege of cutting timber under treaty with the Spanish Government on a definite piece of land.—A.-G. After the death of his wife he "gave, devised, & bequeathed," to be equally divided between three of his children until they should attain the age of twenty-one, "the furniture & moneys, or any property which my wife may have become entitled to through this, my will or through any other source"; &, after they had attained twenty-one, he directed that "the furniture, goods, chattels, & effects, whatsoever the same may be or wheresoever it may be situated, & any moneys my said wife may be entitled to at the time of my decease, should be equally divided amongst his six children. Testator's property substantially consisted of an undivided moiety in real estate, his personalty being of very trifling amount:—Held: although the use of the word "devise," or of the expression "whatsoever the same may be," would not of itself have been enough to make the word "effects" include real estate, the combination of "devise" with the words "whatsoever the same may be & wheresoever the same may be situate," followed in a subsequent clause by the word "property," used as equivalent to "effects," was enough to show the intention to dispose of real estate, & the undivided moiety passed by the will.

5440. —— ——.]—B. died intestate in Dec. 1869, possessed of copyholds held of the manor of Taunton Dene, which by the custom of that manor devolved upon his widow. He left surviving him, besides his widow, his son P., & two daughters of whom one was pltf., Mrs. H. The widow died on Jan. 7, 1870, having by her will devised to her two daughters "the share of her late husband's estate" that she took or was entitled to on his decease, to be divided between them share & share alike. She also gave them pecuniary legacies, & declared that she made this provision for them in lieu of the freehold & copyhold lands which descended to her son on the intestacy of her husband; & she appointed H., the husband of Mrs. H., to be her exor. On her death it was erroneously assumed that the Taunton Dene copyholds had, upon B.'s death devolved upon P. as his customary heir, & from that time the rents were collected by H. & applied to the maintenance of P. until he attained twenty-one, in 1878 when H. accounted to him & handed over the title-deeds. P. continued in possession till his death in 1890, having devised all his real estate to defts. The facts as to the devolution of the copyholds on B.'s death having been discovered on Sept. 25, 1900, an action was brought by Mrs. H. & her husband in her declaration for a right that they were entitled to a moiety of the copyholds under the will of B.'s widow. Semble: on the construction of the will, the copyholds did not pass thereunder.—HOUNSELL v. DUNNING, [1902] 1 Ch. 512; 71 L. 5441. "Government stocks & funds"—Bond.]—Under a bequest of "all debts due & owing to testator at the time of his death," a bond conditioned for replacing a sum of stock sold by testator after the date of his will, & lent by him to the obligor, was held to pass; the day stipulated for the re-investment being passed at the time of his death; therefore not comprehended in the residuary devise enumerating, among other things, "his government stocks & funds."—ESSINGTON v. VASHON (1817), 3 Mer. 434; 36 E. R. 167.

5442. —— East India stock.]—(1) East India stock will not pass under a bequest of money in the "Government or Parliamentary stocks or funds, or foreign stocks or funds."

(2) A term of five hundred years was created in real estate, the trusts of the term being, at the request of B. to raise & pay to him by demise, sale, or mtge., or out of the rents, the sum of £1,500, & in the meantime, & until the whole of this sum should be raised upon trust, to pay to B. interest at 4 per cent.:—Held: the £1,500 thus charged upon the land passed under a specific gift in B.'s will of "all the moneys whatsoever due to me on mtge.; & all debts owing to me on an account."—BROWN v. BROWN (1858), 4 K. & J. 704; 31 L. 5448. "Funds"—Foreign government bonds guaranteed by this country.]—Testator directed all his property, except ready money or moneys in the funds, to be converted into money, & the clear moneys arising from such conversion to be invested in the names of the exors., in 3 per cent. Consols or other Government securities in England:—Held: Greek bonds, though guaranteed by this country, were not comprehended in the word "funds," & they were a proper subject of conversion under the terms of the will.—BURNIE v. GETTING (1845), 2 Coll. 324; 6 L. 5454. —— Stock bought with proceeds of sale of leaseholds.]—Testator directed particular leasehold property to be sold, & the produce to be invested in stock; the interest & dividends to be paid to his wife for life. He then directed the sale of other property to be invested in like manner, & the interest & dividends thereof, & also all such stock as should, at the time of his decease, be standing in his name, to be paid to his wife for life; &, at her decease, "all interest & dividends" were to be accumulated & added to such stock, which stock, together with all accumulations, he gave to his nephew, J. There was no residuary bequest:—Held: as between J. & the next of kin, the gift to J. carried the whole proceeds of the leasehold estates.—Re CURTOIS' WILL TRUSTS (1853), 22 L. J. Ch. 1045; 22 L. T. O. S. 329; 17 Jur. 852.

5455. —— Shares.]—Testator by clause 6 of his will gave all his real & personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale & conversion & to hold the net proceeds as to one moiety upon trust to invest & pay the income to his wife during widowhood, with a gift over, & as to the other moiety upon trust to invest & pay the income to his two daughters for life as tenants in common, with gifts over; clause 9 empowered the trustees to postpone the sale & conversion of all or any part of the estate for so long as they thought fit; & clause 11 empowered the trustees to permit his personal estate invested at his decease upon "any stocks, funds or securities whatsoever yielding income to continue in the same state of investment" so long as they should think fit.

Testator at his death held shares in Canadian land cos. which were valuable & paid good dividends, but were of a wasting character & did not come within the investment clause in the will:—Held: on the evidence, the shares were "stocks" within the meaning of that word in clause 11.—Re INMAN, INMAN v. INMAN, [1915] 1 Ch. 187; 84 L. J. Ch. 309; 112 L. T. 240; 59 Sol. Jo. 161.

5456. "Shares"—Stock—Conversion under scheme of amalgamation.]—(1) Testatrix bequeathed all her shares in the Imperial Gas Light & Coke Co. After the date of her will all testatrix's shares of the above description were, by a statutory scheme of amalgamation of the Imperial & other cos., converted into stock of the Gas Light & Coke Co.:—Held: a provision in the scheme, transferring to the substituted stock the trusts & limitations affecting the old shares, "so as to give effect to & not revoke any testamentary disposition," was effectual to prevent ademption.

(2) After the amalgamation testatrix purchased other stock of the Gas Light & Coke Co.:—Held: these also passed by the bequest.—Re LOVEMAN, WATSON v. WATSON (1879), 48 L. J. Ch. 565.

5457. —— —— ——.]—A gift of "all my shares in" the A., B. & C. cos. was held to pass preferred ordinary stock into which the shares in the co. had been converted on a reconstruction of that co. & amalgamation with another co., but not a debenture bond which had been created by a reconstruction of the A. co., nor debenture stock of the C. co. similarly created on a reconstruction.—Re HUMPHREYS, WREN v. WARD (1915), 114 L. Testator held £500 ordinary shares in J. W. & T. Connolly (S. Africa), Ltd., as trustee, & a debenture for £2,000. He held £500 in debentures & £500 in ordinary shares in the Associated Omnibus Co., Ltd., & he also held £200 mtge. debenture stock & 20 preference shares in Barclay, Perkins & Co., Ltd.:—Held: (1) testator intended to deal with shares & not the debenture, & the debenture did not pass to the specific legatees; (2) the bequests were sufficiently wide to include the debentures & debenture stock notwithstanding the appended inaccurate description.—Re CONNOLLY, WALTON v. CONNOLLY (1914), 110 L. Testator bequeathed to his wife, besides other property, "leasehold estates & all such stocks in the public funds, or shares in any railway of which I may die possessed," & moneys & securities, for her life, then to his children if he should have any, & on her death & failure of issue he gave "the same leasehold estates, stocks, shares, moneys, & securities" unto his brother T. absolutely. The residue, consisting of carriages, furniture, moneys at his bankers, & rents then due to him, he gave to his wife absolutely, & made her his extrix.; he died possessed of stock in the funds, of stock in a railway, & of shares in the same railway, not fully paid up, & not converted into stock:—Held: the words "shares in any railway" passed testator's stock in that railway.—MORRICE v. AYLMER (1875), L. 5467. "Four per cent. trust stock"—Includes three per cent. Consols converted by direction.]—Testator directs the produce of his real estate to be invested by his exors. in their own names in 4 per cent. Consols. He then directs them to transfer the 4 per cent. Consols & 3 per cent. Consols, then standing in his name, to the account in their own names, & afterwards disposes of "the 4 per cent. trust stock." This disposition, under the special provisions of the will, includes the 3 per cent. Consols which were standing in his name at the making of the will.—JAQUES v. JOHNSON (1833), 2 My. & K. 64; 39 E. R. 868.

5468. "Stock in public funds"—Bank stock.]—A bequest of stock in the public funds will not of itself pass bank stock.

The bulk of testator's property being at the time of making his will in Bank stock, he devises & bequeaths all his freehold & leasehold messuages, tenements, etc., & all his ready money, & securities for money, stocks in the public funds, goods, chattels, & effects, & all other his real & personal estate & effects, to trustees, upon trust to pay the rents, fines, & profits of his freehold & leasehold estate, & the dividends, interest, & proceeds of his money in the funds, & other his personal estate, to his daughter for life, etc. For some years after testator's death, the trustees continued to pay to the daughter the annual produce of the Bank stock, leaseholds, etc., leaving testator's property as they found it. On a bill being filed for that purpose, the Bank stock & the leasehold were ordered to be sold, & the proceeds invested in 3 per cent. Consols, & the trustees to reserve out of the future dividends thereof, the difference between what had actually been, & what would have been paid, if the conversion into 3 per cent. Consols had been made on testator's death.—MILLS v. MILLS (1835), 7 Sim. 501; 4 L. J. Ch. 266; 58 E. R. 929.

5471. Capital stock or sum of Consols—Consols standing in joint names of testator & wife.]—A bequest of "the capital stock or sum of £800 Consols" with other specific property does not pass a sum of £800 Consols standing in the joint names of the testator & his wife.—POOLE v. ODLING (1862), 10 W. R. 591, L. JJ.

5472. "Share in mines"—Share in slate quarries.]—Testator, by codicil, bequeathed "all shares in mines of which he should die possessed" to his wife absolutely. At the date of the codicil & of his death, besides certain mining shares acquired after the date of the codicil, testator possessed ten shares in a co. originally formed for slate, copper, & lead mining, but afterwards reconstituted & limited to the working of slate quarries. It being shown, however, that for some years prior to the date of the codicil the co.'s slate works had been, to the knowledge of testator, & at the time of his death still were, carried on almost entirely by underground & mining operations, & not by quarrying:—Held: as against residuary legatees, the shares passed under the specific bequest.—CLEVELAND (DOWAGER DUCHESS) v. MEYRICK (1867), 37 L. 5477. "Bonds & debentures"—Shares in railway company.]—Testator by his will, dated Sept. 25, 1860, made a bequest of "all his Lake Erie bonds & debentures" & other property, to certain persons, "according to the nature & qualities thereof respectively." At this date he was possessed of some bonds of a co. called "The New York & Erie Railroad co." but an exchange was then being carried out by the holders of the bonds of this co. for shares to a like amount in a new co. to be called "The Erie Railway co." & a contract for such transfer had been signed in Oct. 1859. It did not appear that testator knew of the negotiations or contract at the date of his will; but he became acquainted with them on or before July 20, 1861. On Oct. 5, 1861, testator made a codicil, which did not refer in any way to the above bequest, & on Nov. 27, 1861, he died:—Held: the shares of the Erie Railway co., of which testator was possessed at the time of his decease, passed under the specific devise of testator's "Lake Erie bonds & debentures."—Re PILKINGTON'S TRUSTS (1865), 6 New Rep. 246; 13 L. At the date of his will testator was possessed of ten 5 per cent. debentures of £100 each in the S. P. B. Railway co. Testator was the chairman of the co., & at the date of his will & at the time of his death in 1906 he possessed, in addition to debentures & preferred & deferred stock, a considerable amount of debenture stock:—Held: the debenture stock passed under the bequest.—Re HERRING, MURRAY v. HERRING, [1908] 2 Ch. 493; 77 L. Co.," to J. "250 fully-paid shares in the co.," & to C. "50 shares in the co." He then gave "the pecuniary legacies following," giving a list of them. He then bequeathed to his trustees, "£5,000 debenture stock or shares of the S. co., 350 ordinary shares in the same co., £1,500 debenture stock or shares in the B. co., & 35 shares in the D. & H. Railway co., upon trust to continue same in their present state of investment," or to sell them & invest the proceeds, & to stand possessed of the stocks & shares & the proceeds of sale & the investments representing same upon the trusts therein mentioned. He gave his residuary estate to his trustees upon trust to convert it into money & pay his funeral & testamentary expenses & debts, & "pay or provide for the payment of the pecuniary legacies & sums hereinbefore bequeathed." He declared that his trustees might postpone the conversion of his debentures or shares in the S. co., or any other part of his personal estate, so long as they thought fit. Testator had debentures & ordinary shares in the S. co. & debentures in the B. co. There was not in either co. any debenture stock, nor any shares other than ordinary shares:—Held: by "debenture stock or shares" testator intended to describe something different from ordinary shares, but as to the proper designation of which he was in doubt, & must be taken to have meant debentures.—Re NOTTAGE, JONES v. PALMER (No. 2), [1895] 2 Ch. 657; 64 L. Testator was also entitled to £3,000 India 3 per cent. Stock, & had given the bank a power of attorney to receive the dividends thereon, & to sell the stock. The bank did not hold any certificate or document of title relating to the stock:—Held: the Globe shares were not securities & the India stock was not in any sense held by the bank, & therefore neither of these passed under the bequest.—Re MAITLAND, CHITTY v. MAITLAND (1896), 74 L. 5485. ——.]—Testator, who died in 1895, by his will devised & bequeathed his real estate & the residue of his personal estate upon trusts for his wife & children; & testator, after giving his trustees a discretionary power of sale over his real estate, authorised them to invest any trust moneys in their hands "in the purchase or upon mtge. of freehold or leasehold properties in England . . . or in or upon the preferential stocks" of certain railway cos., "or in any other investment in or upon which trustees are authorised by law to invest trust funds, with full power to vary & transpose such securities for others of the description hereinbefore authorised." The will contained no express trust or power for reconversion of purchased real estate. In 1896 the trustees out of trust moneys in their hands purchased real estate, & in 1903 contracted to resell the same. The purchaser objected that the trustees had not power under the will to resell the purchased real estate:—Held: testator had used the word "securities" in its wider sense as a synonym for "investments"; & the power to transpose & vary "securities," so read, enabled the trustees to resell the purchased real estate & to give a good discharge for the purchase-money.—Re GENT & EASON'S CONTRACT, [1905] 1 Ch. 386; 74 L. The remaining quarter of my estate in money & securities to be given to charities including some for poor of C." :—Held: there was sufficient indication, bearing in mind that this was a home-made will, that testatrix did not attach the strict primary meaning of securities for money, which would not embrace stocks & shares other than debenture stock, to the word "securities," but used it in the popular sense, & consequently all investments would pass under the gift.—Re SCORER, BURTT v. HARRISON (1924), 94 L. 5520. "Annuities"—Whether strict interpretation given.]—Testator, by his will dated Jan. 11, 1877, gave his residuary estate to the exors. therein named upon trust out of the rents & profits thereof to pay to W. one annuity of £100 during his life & upon further trust to pay to his son one annuity or yearly sum of £150 during his life & to pay the residue of such rents & profits to his wife during her widowhood & "on the cesser or falling in of any of the said annuities to stand possessed of the corpus of his trust estate sufficient to answer or provide for the payment of every such annuity so ceasing or falling in as aforesaid" upon trust for such person or persons & for such purposes as his son should appoint & in default of such appointment upon trust for the child or children of his son, & if there should be no children of his son upon trust for his three brothers equally. Testator died on Oct. 10, 1877, & his son died on Mar. 31, 1891, without having exercised his power of appointment & without children. W. died on Oct. 27, 1894. On a summons taken out in 1895 by the widow as the then sole exor. & trustee of the will to determine whether testator died intestate as to any & what part of his estate CHITTY, J., held that testator did not die intestate as to any part of his estate. In 1925 the widow of testator died. This summons was then issued by some of the next of kin who had not been parties to the hearing of the summons before CHITTY, J., again raising the question whether there was an intestacy, & CLAUSON, J., followed the decision of CHITTY, J., & the whole corpus necessary to provide the annuities of £100 & £150 & the amount payable to the wife during her widowhood passed under the trust to the three brothers equally. The next of kin represented on this summons appealed on the ground that an appeal was the first free opportunity that they had of putting their case unfettered by the decision of CHITTY, J., before whom they were not represented:—Held: that the words "any of the said annuities" & "every such annuity" were apt to embrace all three of the annual payments whether they were of a sum certain or the uncertain amount dependent upon what the rents & profits of the balance of the corpus should yield to the wife, & the word "annuity" should not be given too rigid an interpretation.—Re FITCH'S WILL TRUSTS, PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. NIVES (1928), 139 L. T. 556, C. A.

5521. "Bonds & moneys"—Debenture stock.]—Testator whose domicil was English, while residing in Nicaragua made his will in the Spanish language, leaving to his wife for life three-fourths of the income derived from the "bonds & moneys" then deposited with a specified bank in London. Upon the death of his wife this same income was to be paid to his sister F., & the income of the other one-fourth was to be equally divided between F. & a brother. No exor. was appointed by testator, & there were no children of the marriage. Testator's widow died on Nov. 15, 1918. On Apr. 27, 1920, letters of administration with the will annexed of testator's estate were obtained by F. from the Probate Registry in England, & a translation of the will into English was registered with it. At the bank in London there were deposited fifteen securities consisting of bonds to bearer, debenture stocks & one sum of inscribed stock. Two of the certificates of debenture stock were not under seal. There was evidence that "bonds" was the correct translation of the Spanish word "bonos" used by testator:—Held: the absence of sufficient proof of any special local meaning of the Spanish word, the word "bonds" did not include the stocks the certificates of which were not under seal, & testator died intestate as to these two items of debenture stock as well as to the inscribed stock.—Re MANNERS, MANNERS v.

5524. "Dividends due at time of decease"—Capitalised dividends.]—Testator bequeathed the dividends on his American bonds, "which should be due to him at the time of his decease" upon trust for payment thereout of certain arrears of allowances to his daughters. In testator's lifetime the dividends on these bonds having fallen into arrear, part of the arrears were capitalised, & bonds issued for the amount, & delivered to the trustees of a separation deed executed by testator, though it did not appear that he was himself aware of the capitalisation :—Held : testator must be taken to have been aware of the capitalisation, & therefore the capitalised bonds did not pass as dividends due to him at the time of his death, but only the uncapitalised dividends passed.—RICKETTS v. HARLING (1870), 23 L. 5525. "Dividends of money in the funds"—Dividends not received.]—Testator bequeathed all the dividends or interest of all his money in the funds, & of all other his personal property, to A. for life. Testator was at his death entitled to some dividends on stock which had accrued due during his life, but had not been received by him :—Held : such dividends did not pass under the words "dividends of money in the funds," but formed part of his general personal estate.—SHORE v. WEEKLY (1849), 3 De G. & Sm. 467 ; 18 L. 5528. "Policies of insurance"—Shares in insurance companies.]—Testator gave to his niece "£1,000 & all the policies of life insurance which I have effected in the Union & Law Life Insurance Offices, & the moneys payable in respect thereof ; & I direct the same to be paid to her" in a specified manner. He then gave to his wife "the other policies of life insurance which I have effected in any other offices" ; & the gift of his residuary personal estate to his wife contained, in its enumeration, "shares in public cos." Testator never had any "policies" effected on his life in the Union or Law Life Insurance Offices, but he had "shares" in those offices & in other offices, as well as two policies on his life in one other insurance office. On a case stated between the niece & widow of testator :—Held : testator, imagining in error that he had policies in two offices, meant to give those policies. Where he meant to give shares he had so described them ; & as it could not be known what will testator would have made if he had not committed this error, the ct. held that the shares did not pass under the description of policies.—WATERS v. WOOD (1852), 5 De G. & Sm. 717 ; 22 L. 5550. "Chattels"—Chattels forming part of special decorative design—Specimen of period room.]—Testator in his lifetime bought a house in which the former owner had fitted & decorated the dining room as a perfect specimen of an Elizabethan room. As part of this scheme of decoration certain pieces of tapestry had been fixed to the walls by being nailed upon wooden frames which were kept in their place by the mouldings of an oak dado & frieze above it which were fastened to the wall by screws. A picture of Queen Elizabeth, attributed to Zucchero, painted on wood, was similarly fixed in its place over the fireplace by the mouldings of an overmantel which had apparently been constructed for the picture. The picture & tapestries were bought by testator as part of the house & included in its price. Testator by his will gave his wife all the furniture & chattels in the house, & devised the house to trustees upon trust to permit her to reside there during widowhood, & then upon trusts under which his grandson had become absolutely entitled:—Held: the picture & tapestry, having been fixed as part of a general scheme of decoration & not for their better enjoyment as chattels, passed under the devise of the house & not under the gift of chattels.—Re WHALEY, WHALEY v. ROEHRICH, [1908] 1 Ch. 615; 77 L. Testator had, as a house of business, a tavern & betting office & a private residence, both containing furniture, & he lived at the latter, but sometimes slept at the former. At the time of his death he had at a bank £2,000 on a common banking account, & £5,000 on a deposit account, for which latter interest was allowed; he had placed £6,000 with certain stakeholders to abide the event of a bet, & after his death it was repaid to his administratrix; & he held moneys for wagers, some of which were decided in his lifetime, but others not; all of which the administratrix paid:—Held: (1) the £2,000 & the £5,000 deposit account passed to the widow under the word "moneys." 5602. Stamp collection.]—By his will dated in 1906 testator, who died in 1915, bequeathed his "jewellery, plate, linen, china, glass, books, pictures, prints, furniture, wines, liquors, & other consumable stores, & other household effects" to his wife. Testator died possessed of a very valuable collection of postage stamps, some of which were mounted in albums & others on cards, & tied up in separate bundles under separate headings. The stamp collection was deposited for safe custody with the local branch of a bank, where it remained until six months after testator's death :—Held : (1) the stamp collection did not pass to testator's widow under any of the words of the specific bequest ; (2) it did not pass under the gift of "books" because the albums in which the stamps were mounted were merely accessory to the stamps themselves & constituted a mere medium for preserving the stamps, which were the valuable part, the albums being merely cases or covers for them ; (3) "pictures" & "prints" was not apt to describe a collection of stamps, nor did it pass under the description "other household effects."—Re MASSON, MORTON v. MASSON (1917), 86 L. 5657. ·.]—Testator devised to trustees all his messuages or tenements, farms, lands, hereditaments, & premises, with the appurtenances, situate in C. & W., & all other his freehold lands & tenements whatsoever; to hold all such his said real estate, with the appurtenances, to the trustees & their heirs, upon trust for the use of his wife for life, with limitations, after her decease, which were applicable to freeholds only; & he gave all his household goods, implements of husbandry, farming stock, moneys, securities for money, & all other his personal estate & effects whatsoever, to his wife, for her own sole use. Testator was seised, in fee, of freehold lands in C., W. & S., but there was no messuage or other building on any of those lands, except a wooden barn & stable on the land in S. He was also possessed of land in C. for a long term of years, on which there were a messuage, & farm buildings; &, at his death & for six years before, he occupied the freehold & leaseholds as one farm, but they did not adjoin each other:—Held: the leaseholds did not pass, under the devise of all testator's messuages or tenements, farms, etc., but under the bequest of testator's personal estate.—ARKELL v. FLETCHER (1839), 10 Sim. 299; 3 Jur. 1099; 59 E. 5658. Effect of additional descriptive words.]—Testator having, by his will, made a marked distinction between his real & personal estate, gave the residue "of his personal estate, goods, & chattels" to his brother absolutely, & he devised "all & singular his manors, lordships, rectories, advowsons, messuages, lands, tenements, tithes, & hereditaments, situate at or near W., "& all other his real estates in W., & elsewhere in Great Britain" to trustees for his brother for life, with remainder to his first & other sons, etc.:—Held: (1) upon the context of the will, testator's leaseholds for years passed under the residuary bequest to A. absolutely, & not in strict settlement with the real estates; &, (2) although the Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), was applicable to this case, still sect. 26, which enacts that a devise of the land of testator, etc., shall be construed to include leasehold estates to which such description shall extend, unless a contrary intention shall appear, did not affect the above construction.

(3) In the very numerous cases in which the rule in Rose v. Bartlett, No. 5627, ante, has been referred to & discussed, it does not appear to have been intentionally or substantially varied; but when the words describing the subject of the devise have not been simply "lands & tenements," but the words "farms, messuages, & mines," or any of them have been added, or testator has, in addition to the words simply describing the subject of the devise, used other words descriptive of the nature or extent of his interest in the thing given, & that interest, as described, is properly applicable to leaseholds, or has used words plainly connecting property which was leasehold with the lands or tenements or hereditaments the principal subject of the devise, the additional words have, although not in a manner always approved of, been held to warrant the conclusion that leaseholds were within the description of the thing devised.—WILSON v. EDEN (1848), 11 Beav. 237; 17 L. 5662. ——.]—By will, dated June 23, 1828, testator, therein described as "of W. in the county of L." devised all his real & personal estate to his wife for life, durante viduitate, & after her decease or second marriage he willed that his "freehold estate in W. aforesaid should not be sold or mortgaged, etc., but should remain in the family for ever," & he further devised the "rents, issues, & profits, of his freehold estate, after his wife's decease or second marriage, unto all his children equally between them, share & share alike." By a codicil executed on the same day testator willed as follows : "I give, devise, & bequeath unto my son E., after the decease or marriage of my wife, all, & every part of my "freehold messuage, with all the appurtenances thereto belonging, or in any manner appertaining, to hold to him, his heirs & assigns for ever. & in all other respects I confirm my said will ; my personal property to be divided amongst my other children, share & share alike."

Testator died on June 30, 1828, leaving his widow & four children surviving—viz., E., deft., then aged eighteen ; D., since deceased, then aged seventeen ; J., since deceased, then aged fifteen, & A., the wife of pltf., then aged thirteen. On Feb. 16, 1831, the widow married again, whereupon deft., the eldest son, entered into possession of the farm & lands, comprising the freehold estate & freehold messuages & appurtenances respectively mentioned in the agreement & codicil, & has remained in possession ever since. Pltf., A., was married to her husband & co-pltf. on Oct. 11, 1833, being then under the age of twenty-one years.

Ejectment was brought by pltfs. on July 4, 1870, to recover possession from deft. of one-fourth of the freehold farm & lands at W., in which a verdict was entered by consent for deft., & upon a rule to set that verdict aside & enter it for pltfs., pursuant to leave reserved, on the ground that the house, etc., & not the land, passed under the codicil to deft. :—Held : giving the ordinary meaning to the word "messuage," the farmhouse & its appurtenances, such as the curtilage, garden, & orchard usually held with it, alone passed to deft. under the codicil, & there was no reason for departing from the ordinary construction & meaning of that word in the present case.—BORROWS v. ELLISON (1871), L. I concur in this: that if testator, by his will, gives matters, which are not money in the ordinary acceptation of the term, & afterwards gives all "other my moneys whatsoever & wheresoever," he applies that expression to things which are not strictly money & consequently that things not of that character pass under the gift. Thus if testator gives Whiteacre & all the rest of my money to A. B., he means all his property, for he treats Whiteacre as "money," although land or real estate & personal chattels are not properly speaking "money" (LORD ROMILLY, M.R.).—STOOKE v. STOOKE (1866), 35 Beav. 396; 14 W. (b) What Passes under Bequest of Money.

i. In General.

5710. Moneys arising from sale of real estate.]—In this case the bequests to her servants will comprehend W.'s mtge., & the arrears of rent, since these must be looked upon by all the rules of construction to be S.'s money at the time of her death; but the word "money" will not comprehend South-Sea stock or annuity stock, because that is an interest arising out of funds, settled by public laws; & though it be redeemable by money, or saleable for money, yet it can be no more looked upon as money at the time of S.'s decease than a term of years, a coach & horses, or any other real or personal chattel whatsoever can; & therefore I am clearly of opinion it can't be comprehended in the word (money). I am likewise of opinion, that the money arising by the sale of the house in Bedford Buildings will not be comprised by this bequest, because that was not money left behind her at the time of her decease, for then it was a chattel real, & it could not by the frame of the will be sold till a month after her decease, since the servants are by an express clause in the will to remain there during that time (GILBERT, B.).—SHELMER'S CASE (1725), Gilb. Consolidated Bank annuities standing in her name, gave & bequeathed the same or so much of such bank annuities as should be standing in her name at her death. At the date of her will & at her death she had near £15,000 in that fund, besides other stock. The excess beyond the sum mentioned did not pass.

(2) A residuary bequest in general terms. Revocation by a codicil as to "plate linen household goods & other effects (money excepted)." The exception prevents the restrained construction, in general, of the words "other effects": viz. ejusdem generis: stock therefore, which does not pass under the word "money," was included, with leasehold & all personal property, except money & bank notes.

The express exception of money out of the "other effects" shows her understanding, that it would have passed by those words; the express words were required to exclude it; & by force of that exclusion in the excepted article she says, she thought, that the words of her bequest would carry things, not ejusdem generis. This disposition must therefore be taken to comprehend all that she has not excluded; which is money only. The question then comes to be, whether stock, supposing it to be part of the residue, is money; whether it was ever considered money in such a bequest as this. There is no instance of that. Stock does not pass by the word "money"; & the argument is fortified by what I must, as a judge, take to be a deliberate contrast of stock & money throughout this will (LORD ELDON, C.).—HOTHAM v. SUTTON (1808), 15 Ves. 319; 33 E. 5779. —— Bequest of "interest or moneys."]—(1) By a marriage settlement, the husband covenanted that his representatives should, after his death, pay a sum of money to the trustees of the settlement to be held by them upon the trusts thereof. The husband died & the covenant was never called into operation by the wife, the only person who had any interest in its performance. By her will she made a bequest of "all her husband's settled funds":—Held: this gift did not include the money covenanted to be paid under the settlement.

(2) Testatrix made a bequest of "any interest or moneys to which she might be entitled on behalf of her late husband." At the time of her death, she was entitled to a reversionary interest in a sum of Consols, & to certain other property, outstanding in the names of trustees, but to which she might at any time have obtained possession. As to one-third of the whole of this property, she had become directly entitled through her husband, & as to the other two-thirds, through her infant son, who had acquired the same as one of the next of kin of his father:—Held: the whole of the property passed under the bequest.—MOYSEY v. STUART (1870), 23 L. By a codicil he gave his wife the interest of all the moneys left by me up to the time of the division of the same:—Held: in a question between his trustees & one of his next-of-kin, that upon a round construction of the testamentary writings, which were expressed in popular language, the word "money," & "moneys" included testator's whole movable estate which had not been otherwise specifically disposed of.—EASSON v. THOMSON'S TRUSTEES (1879), 7 R. Sect. 15—Descriptions of property: Sub-sect. 14, L. (b) vi.]

5781. ——.]—Testator, after bequeathing to A. & B. legacies of stock unequal in amount, & several legacies to public charities, requests the said A. & B. to be his exors., & gives to them as such 100 guineas each. He then orders his books jewels plate & household furniture to be sold, & after desiring mourning to be provided for his servants, & 5 guineas each to be given to several persons named in the will & to his two exors. for a ring as a token of remembrance, concludes his will in the following manner, "In case there is any money remaining I should wish it to be given in private charity":—Held: the general residue of testator's personal estate, consisting of a leasehold estate, money in the funds, & a balance in cash, was not comprehended in the residuary clause, which was confined to the residue of the produce of the articles which testator directed to be sold.

The words of the will are, if there be any money remaining. . . . My opinion is, that testator was adverting to that which he has directed to be converted into money, & that the clause in question does not comprehend the general residue, but must be considered as applying to the residue of the produce of those articles which testator has directed to be sold, after providing for the payments which are ordered to be made (PLUMER, M.R.).—OMMANNEY v. BUTCHER (1823), Turn. & R. 260; 37 E. Testator, at the date of his will & at his death, had money accounts subsisting between him & his bankers & other persons:—Held: the bequest did not pass his residuary estate, but only the balances due on those accounts, subject to the debts & legacies.—HASTINGS v. HANE (1833), 6 Sim. 67; 58 E. 5783. ——.]—Testatrix, whose personal property consisted chiefly of stock, after bequeathing a number of pecuniary & specific legacies, & giving certain directions as to her funeral, gave £200 to each of her exors. for their trouble, & bequeathed whatever remained of money to the five children of E.:—Held: by the words, "whatever remains of money" testatrix referred to her general residuary personal estate.

The word "money" unexplained in a will, will not pass stock, but where, from the context of the whole will such an intention is manifest, the ct. will act on it.—DOWSON v. GASKOIN (1837), 2 Keen, 14; 6 L. J. Ch. 295; 48 E. R. 533.

On a question whether a sum of stock was disposed of by the will:—Held: the will operated as a complete disposition of all the personal estate, even if the word "moneys" were to receive only the strict construction; but on the context of this will, the word "moneys" must be taken to include stock in the funds.—WAITE v. COMBES (1852), 5 De G. & Sm. 676; 21 L. 5800. ——.]—The word "moneys" in a will is a flexible term, having a more or less extended meaning, according to the facts of the case & the terms of the will. The ct. is bound, however, to put upon the word its ordinary & literal meaning unless the context shows that a larger meaning should be put upon it. In 1874 testatrix made her will appointing exors. & directing payment of her debts & other expenses, & giving "all her moneys" to her brothers & sisters in equal shares. She then proceeded specifically & minutely to dispose of her furniture & trinkets, without, however, expressly referring to any stocks or investments, or residuary real or personal estate. By a codicil made in Aug. 1883, she bequeathed all her furniture & effects in the house in which she & a named sister might be living together at the time of her death to such sister for life, with remainder to the persons to whom such effects were bequeathed by her will; & she confirmed her will in all other respects. In Sept. 1883, testatrix died, leaving (inter alia) New 3 per cent. Annuities, G. N. Ry. Consolidated & Preference stocks, & Chilian Government Bonds, payable to bearer, as well as cash in the house, & debts due to her, & furniture & trinkets, including some small articles not specifically bequeathed:—Held: although the gift of "all my moneys" could not be treated as a residuary bequest, yet, under the circumstances, such gift in fact passed all the items, other than furniture & trinkets, of which testatrix died possessed.—Re TOWNLEY, TOWNLEY v. TOWNLEY (1884), 53 L. I also give to my dear wife all the furniture & effects at 48, Westbourne Park Road, except the piano & hall clock":—Held: the words "remainder of my money" passed all stock & investments of money, but not the general residue other than such investments—HART v. HERNANDEZ (1885), 52 L. She gave the remainder of that property to W. specifically; &, after making certain specific bequests of furniture & jewellery, gave her interest in certain real estate to A. & made him her residuary legatee. The property purchased from R. was leasehold, held for a very long term of years. Testatrix at her death possessed no actual cash. She had a small sum due to her for rents, & the half of a turnpike bond, besides furniture, the property purchased from R., one leasehold dwelling-house, & the real estate specifically devised to A.:—Held: the word "money" must be taken to mean not the general personal estate, but the rents & money due on the bond, & those being exhausted, the residue of the debts must be paid out of the property purchased from R. in exoneration of the furniture & leaseholds.—LLOYD v. LLOYD (1886), 54 L. Testatrix died on Mar. 5, 1895, having survived the above-mentioned legatee C., who died on Dec. 26, 1891, after the date of the will.

Testatrix's estate, at the time of her death, consisted of cash, 500 shares of £1 each in the Dairy co. aforesaid, the value whereof was at that time about 30*s.* per share, stocks & shares in other cos., & also a one-fourth share in certain railway stock in reversion to which she was contingently entitled on the death of the tenant for life without children:—Held: (1) the gift of "£400 invested in the Belgravian Dairy co." was a gift of 400 shares in that co., & not a gift of £400 sterling; (2) the words "all my money" included not only the residue of the personal property to which testatrix was entitled in possession, but also the one-fourth share in the railway stock to which she was contingently entitled in reversion.—Re BULLER, BULLER v. GIBERNE (1896), 74 L. At the time of her death in 1781, she was one of the two next of kin of her son, who had died intestate in 1778. The son was the residuary legatee of his father, who had died in 1776. In 1800 a decree was made for taking the accounts of a partnership in which the father had been engaged, & which had been dissolved by the death of the other partner a few months before the father's death. In 1820 the representatives of the surviving exor. of the father paid into ct. in this suit a sum of money on account of what was due from the exor. to the father's estate in respect of moneys coming from the partnership. Nothing was shown as to the state of the partnership assets or of the estates of the father or son at the time of the death of testatrix:—Held: the moiety of testatrix in the fund in question did not pass under the gift of "sums of money due & owing to me at the time of my decease"; but under the residuary bequest, it not being shown that the assets were at her death in such a state that her share could be treated as a sum of money then owing to her.—MARTIN v. HOBSON (1873), 8 Ch. 5844. Money invested in Consols.]—A British subject domiciled in Russia made a will in the Russian language & in Russian form, commencing with the statement that he thereby disposed of all his property. He then directed a sale of his landed estates in Russia, which he specified, & proceeded to make a disposition of "the money proceeds of all the above, as also the whole of my capital which shall remain with me after my death in ready money, & in bank billets, belonging to me." He then closed his will with the statement that as all his property was entirely his own, & acquired by himself, nobody had a right to interfere with or contest his dispositions or those of his exors. It was proved that "bank billets" were a particular kind of Russian negotiable securities. At the time of testator's death, he had, beside his Russian property, a large sum in the English funds:—Held: the words "in ready money & in bank billets" were not merely words of defective enumeration, but a description comprising the whole subject of the gift—the description of the gift being clear & unambiguous, the first & last clauses of the will were not sufficient to extend the meaning of that description, & testator's property in the English funds was undisposed of.—WYLIE v. WYLIE, WYLIE v. ENOHIN (1860), 1 De G. 5852. "All my personal estates" — Real estate.]—Real property may pass under the description of "personal estates" in a will; it being manifest from the whole of the instrument, as by terms of direct reference to that description in ulterior dispositions of the same real property, that such was the devisor's intention.

As to the freehold lands, the ct. has had no doubt: the only question as to them was, whether they passed under the words "all my personal estates"; & it being clear beyond all possibility of doubt upon the face of the will, that testator meant by these words, not what is ordinarily understood by them, but, such real property over which he had an absolute personal power of disposition & control, we have no hesitation in saying that the freehold passed by this description (LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J.).—DOE d. A. afterwards made a will, giving to his wife "the whole of my personal property, estate & effects, of every & whatsoever kind they may be":—Held: the gift in the will was confined to personal estate, & did not pass the reversion in fee, but the term was a term in gross, & passed by the will as personal estate.—BELANEY v. BELANEY (1867), 2 Ch. The navigation undertaking & property, became vested by Act of Parliament in a railway co., & the Act provided that upon any person executing a conveyance of his navigation shares to the co., the freehold rights belonging to those shares should be extinguished. The navigation shares mentioned in the bill were never conveyed, but stood in testator's name at his death:—Held: the shares were equitably converted under the Act, but even had this not been the case they would have passed under the bequest of the residue of "the personal estate & effects" to C.—CADMAN v. CADMAN (1872), L. "all my personal property, wherewith it has pleased God to bless me; that is, my freehold land & my two cottages, Pennce Birr, situate at Clowstop . . . also my five leasehold houses . . . to have & to hold the same for her natural life." He then directed her to provide "out of the rents of the above property" for a granddaughter of hers, & concluded "my wife R. to be sole exor. of the same." Subsequently to the date of his will testator acquired other freehold property at Clowstop, of which, together with personal property, besides the leaseholds, he died possessed. The question was, what property passed by the will:—Held: the words "personal property" were not used in their technical sense; testator meant to give all the property of every kind belonging to him personally; this general description was not cut down by the words of enumeration which followed; & the widow was entitled, for her life, to all the real & personal estate of testator which he possessed at the date of his death.—Re SMALLEY, SMALLEY v. SMALLEY (1883), 49 L. The settlement declared trusts of a sum of money, settled by testator in favour of himself & his wife successively for life, with remainder in default of issue, which happened, to himself absolutely. The house together with certain stables had been bought by him with some of the settlement funds, advanced for the purpose by the trustees upon the security of the purchased premises. The stables were in communication with the house, but were at some little distance from it. The house & stables were held under distinct leases, which, however, bore the same date, were between the same parties, & had been assigned to testator by the same deed:—Held: the widow was absolutely entitled to both house & stables.—MOCATTA v. MOCATTA (1883), 49 L. The subject of his gift is, "all that he possessed, in any way belonging to him, by them freely to be enjoyed or possessed, of whatever nature or manner it might be." To a gift of all his property ; & a gift of all property will not only pass real estate, but will pass all the interest of testator in that estate (LEACH, M.R.).—THOMAS v. PHELPS (1828), 4 Russ. 348 ; 6 L. 5880. Mortgage securities.]—Testator, by his will, gave "all my property in the Russian & Austrian Funds, & also that vested in a Swedish mtge. security." Testator, at the date of the will, had twelve different mtge. securities for different sums, three of which were not perfected according to the law of Sweden :—Held : the words "all my property," being connected with the latter part of the gift by the conjunctions "& also," all the Swedish mtge. securities passed under the gift.—RICHARDS v. PATTESON (1847), 15 Sim. 501 ; 11 Jur. 113 ; 60 E. 5881. Pure personalty—Intention of testator.]—By his codicil the testator, "after all his funeral, testamentary & all other expenses were paid, & whatever legacies he might subsequently make, gave & bequeathed the residue of his property to the following charitable societies, to be divided equally amongst them"—enumerating seven charitable societies. His property consisted partly of personalty savouring of realty, & partly of pure personalty :—Held : the direction in the will was sufficient evidence of intention to cut down the meaning of the word "property" in the codicil to such part of testator's personal estate as he knew the charities could take, that is to say, to the pure personalty.—JAUNCEY v. A.-G. 5882. Land of which testator is mortgagee.]—The lessee of a term of years in four houses assigned the term, by way of mtge., to the owner in fee, of the immediate reversion, who afterwards devised the houses by the description of "my freehold houses Nos. 5, 6, 7, & 8, Stock Street," & was at the time of his death in possession as mtgee.:—Held: the mtge. debt did not pass under the devise, but formed part of testator's personal estate.—BOWEN v. BARLOW (1872), 8 Ch. 5884. Tithes.] — Testator devised certain tithes to his nephews D. & W. for their lives successively; & after the expiration thereof, to the several provisions & uses therein expressed & contained of & concerning his real estates; & he devised all his real estates of what nature or kind soever, & wheresoever situate, subject to the payment of his debts, etc., in aid of his personal estate, to his niece, & her sons in strict settlement, with remainders to his nephew W. & his sons, & to two other persons & their sons, in like manner, with remainder to another person in fee. The niece married & had a son after the date of the will; & testator, by a codicil, devised all his real estates of what nature or kind soever to that son for life, with limitations by way of remainder, to his first & other sons in tail male; & on failure of such issue he devised all his said real estates in the manner mentioned in his will, & declared that the devises thereinbefore made should take effect in precedence to the devises of his real estates contained in his will:—Held: the words "all my real estates," in the will, did not include the tithes; but those words in the codicil did include them.—EVANS v. EVANS (1849), 17 Sim. 86; 14 Jur. 383; 60 E. 5885. ——.]—Testator, seised in fee of tithes & land, devised his tithes specifically to his nephew D. W. for life, remainder to the uses expressed concerning his "real estate"; he then made certain things heirlooms, directing the inventory thereof to be deposited with the deeds concerning his "real estate"; & then devised all his "real estate," of what kind or nature soever, & wheresoever situate, to his niece M. for life, remainder to her sons successively in tail, remainders over. Testator afterwards made two codicils, by the first of which he changed the order of parties in his will to succeed in the entail of "his estates, real & personal," & by the second he declared "all the estates" left & disposed of by his will to be without impeachment of waste, with power to cut timber for repairs of buildings "on the estate." By a fourth codicil testator devised all "his real estates, of what nature or kind soever," to H. D., son of his niece M., in strict settlement; & upon failure of his issue, all his said "real estate in such manner as mentioned in his will"; declaring that the devises in the codicil were to take effect in precedence of the devises of the "real estate" contained in his will; & he appointed D. W. residuary legatee:—Held: the term "real estate" in the will did not include tithes, & the specific devise of tithes took effect; & the term "real estate" in the fourth codicil did not include tithes, & did not revoke the specific devise of tithes in the will.—WILLIAMS v. EVANS (1853), 1 E. & B. 727; 22 L. 5889. Interest under trust for sale.]—Testatrix devised all her real estate to trustees upon trust to pay the net rents & profits (subject to the payment thereout of a life annuity of £200 to her husband) to her sister during her life, & after the sister's death upon trust as to the said real estate, & the income thereof for the sister's children, & testatrix conferred upon her trustees power to demise & other powers incident to the management of real estate. Testatrix was not beneficially entitled to any real estate either at the date of her will or at her death, but at both those dates she was entitled, subject to certain subsisting annuities, to a moiety of the income & capital of the proceeds of sale of certain freehold property devised by her father's will upon trust for sale & vested in her as trustee of his will. There had been no election by the beneficiaries to take the freehold property unconverted:—Held: the devise in testatrix's will passed all the beneficial interest to which she was entitled in the real estate held upon trust for sale under her father's will.—Re GLASSINGTON, GLASSINGTON v. FOLLETT, [1906] 2 Ch. 305; 75 L. Testatrix died on Mar. 4. By the custom of the estate the rents, though due according to the agreements quarterly, were collected half-yearly at Michaelmas & Lady Day:—Held: the bequest included not only all arrears due at the preceding Michaelmas & unpaid, but the rents due at Christmas & the apportioned part accrued from Christmas to the death; arrears of tithe rentcharge were also included; & the bequest carried the gross rents without any deductions for collection or outgoings.—Re FORD, MYERS v. MOLESWORTH, [1911] 1 Ch. 455; 80 L. 5897. "All income arising from my estate"—Profits arising from business.]—Testator devised & bequeathed the residue of his property, whether real or personal, to trustees, upon trust for sale & conversion at such times & in such manner as they should think fit, but as to his business carried on in Sicily that they should wind up & dispose of the same as soon as practicable after his death, & if possible within twelve months thereof. There was express power to postpone the conversion of any part of his property other than the business. He then gave his wife a life interest in the income of his estate, &, subject thereto, his infant daughter was entitled to the whole estate contingently on attaining twenty-one or being married. The will contained a subsequent declaration by testator that "all the income arising from my estate" should, until conversion, be applied as if it were income arising from the proceeds of the conversion, no part thereof being liable to be retained as capital.

Upon a summons to determine whether the profits of the business earned since testator's death should be treated as income or be divided between capital & income: Held: the expression "all the income arising from my estate" included the profits arising from the business.—Re ELFORD, ELFORD v. ELFORD, [1910] 1 Ch. 814; 79 L. In 1918 testatrix having become through senility unable to manage her affairs, a receiver of her estate was appointed by the Master in Lunacy, who authorised the sale of her motor car. A part of the purchase-money was applied for her maintenance. She died in 1920, having no horses or carriages, but the receiver still held the balance of the purchase-money. The estate proved insufficient to pay all the legacies in full. On an originating summons taken out by the trustees, asking, among other things, whether the above-named legatees were entitled to the balance of the purchase-money & whether specific legatees were to bear the cost of packing & dispatching the articles specifically bequeathed to them:—Held: the above-mentioned gift included the motor car & the legatees were entitled to such of the proceeds of the sale thereof as had not been applied by the receiver.—Re SIVEWRIGHT, LAW v. FENWICK (1922), 128 L. The dividend on the shares for the year ending on Dec. 31, 1913, was, in accordance with the practice of the co. declared at the ordinary general meeting of the co. held on Feb. 10, 1914:—Held: the meaning of the words "current dividends" in this will was explained in a subsequent part of the clause containing the bequest, & the dividend declared on Feb. 10, 1914, was a "current dividend" passing with the specific gifts of the shares.—Re RAVEN, SPENCER v. RAVEN (1914), 111 L. T. 938.

5913. Debts.]—A codicil to the will of testator contained the following phrase: "I forgive all debts owing to me." There was no context in the codicil to affect the construction of these words, but by his will & codicil testator, whose estate was valued at £52,000 personalty & £10,000 realty, had given pecuniary legacies amounting to nearly £22,000 & made a residuary gift to the Skinners Company. The will conferred upon the trustees power to appropriate any part of testator's estate "or the investments for the time representing the sum" in satisfaction of any legacy. Testator's personalty consisted to the extent of some £22,000 of British & foreign Government securities, redeemable debenture & debenture stock in commercial cos., & of certain mtges. & charges & sums of loan stock. The estate also included certain loans to friends & past employees of testator to start them in business, & these the exors. had, with the consent of the residuary legatees, treated as released by the forgiveness of debts. This summons raised the question whether this forgiveness of debts operated as a legacy to certain cos. & societies of the mtge. debts owing by them on the security of the mtges. & charges & of the amounts secured by the loan stock. The mtges. & charges did not differ from ordinary mtge. securities, & the loan stock was of the nature of permanent debenture stock, being redeemable only in certain events:—Held: having regard to the above circumstances, the word "debts" must receive a narrower construction than the strict legal meaning of the word; its use in connection with the expression "I forgive" introduced a personal note into the matter with which testator was intending to deal; & therefore the mtge. debts & sums of loan stock were not released.—Re NEVILLE, NEVILLE v. FIRST GARDEN CITY, LTD., [1925] Ch. 44; 94 L. J. Ch. 130; 132 L. T. 602; 41 T. L. R. 2; 69 Sol. Jo. 125.

5914. "Effects belonging to the business"—Fixtures.]—Testator gave his real & leasehold estate, stock-in-trade, money at the bank, goodwill, book debts, & effects belonging to his business to his son, & charged his real & leasehold estates with the payment of legacies. The estates were sold to pay the legacies, & bought in by the son:—Held: the fixtures passed to the son under the bequest of "effects belonging to the business."—PINDER v. PINDER (1870), 18 W. The frame of the will left it doubtful whether these words were intended to apply generally or only to the residue of the particular funds:—Held: considering the general frame of the will, only what was left of the particular funds passed.—JULL v. JACOBS (1876), 3 Ch. 5916. "Everything else at my house."]—Bequest of the use & enjoyment "of everything else at my house," means such things as are proper to go with the house as heirlooms, viz. fixtures & ornaments, not watches, etc.

"Everything else at my house" means of the same kind, proper to go with the house, as heirlooms, viz. fixtures & ornaments.—BOON v. CORNFORTH (1751), 2 Ves. Sen. 277; 28 E. R. 179, L. C.

5917. "Farm"—Leasehold estate.]—The word "farm" in a will is sufficient to pass a leasehold estate, if it appear to have been testator's intention that it should so pass. A. being seised of several freehold estates, & possessed of part of a farm held by a church lease renewable, the other part of the farm being freehold, & the whole having been always let together as one entire farm, at one rent, devised "all his manors, messuages, houses, farms, lands, woodlands, hereditaments, & real estates whatsoever," to B.: & gave "all the rest & residue of his ready money, rents in arrear, stock in the public funds, jewels, & personal estate whatsoever" to C.:—Held: the leasehold part of the farm passed under the first devise.—LANE v. STANHOPE (EARL) (1795), 6 Term Rep. 345; 101 E. "all his money," etc., stock upon his farm, with the implements of husbandry, & all other his personal estate of what nature or kind soever, in trust to pay debts & legacies, etc.:—Held: the devise of the stock upon his farm carried the standing crops of corn growing there at the time of his death from the devisee of the land to the exors., although there were assets sufficient to pay all the debts & legacies without that aid.—WEST v. MOORE (1807), 8 East, 339; 103 E. 5920. ——— ———.]—A farmer bequeathed "the whole of the consumable & other provisions, farming stock & effects, farming implements, growing crops & tenant right" in or upon his dwelling-house & farm at his death to trustees, to carry on the farm, "until Apr. 6 next subsequent to or following the time of his decease," & after that day, to transfer "the consumable & other provisions, farming stock & effects," etc., then upon his house & farm to his son. He declared that his trustees were not to sell the "farming stock & effects" except in the ordinary course of management of the farm, & that the money produced thereby should fall into his residue. Testator died about four o'clock on Apr. 5, at which time there was on the farm, besides the ordinary farming stock, a large quantity of corn & wool of the last year's produce, & an excess of fat sheep & stock of the value of £3,314:—Held: these passed to the son.—HARVEY v. HARVEY (1863), 32 Beav. 441; 55 E. See EXECUTORS, Vol. XXIII., pp. 459–473.

5965. Meaning of residue—Reference to something going before.]—By all the rules of grammar, as well as law, the words rest & residue must relate to something that went before, & where testator calls it by the name of real estate, can never be said to affect his personal.—BEAUCLERK v. MEAD (1741), 2 Atk. 167; 26 E. R. 505, L. C.

5971. —— Whether everything undisposed of by will—Lapsed gift of residue.]—The general operation of the word "residue," as used in a will, may be restricted by the sense in which the testator uses it. The word "residue" does not in all cases include that which is undisposed of by a will; a lapsed share of a residue does not accrue in augmentation of the residue, but goes to the next of kin.—GREEN v. PERTWEE (1846), 5 Hare, 249; 15 L. 5982. Rules applicable to gift of residue—Application to parts into which residue divided.]—(1) The rules which are applicable to the gift of a residue are applicable to the parts into which that residue may be divided.

(2) T., by his will, devised his real estates to trustees, on trusts, one of which was a disposition, good as an executory devise, which could not take effect until the death of his daughter. He directed the residue of his personal estate to be divided into three equal parts, & gave the same to his trustees, who were also his exors., on trust to invest two-third parts in the purchase of real estate to be settled to the same purposes as those directed as to his original real estates—the other third to be also invested in the purchase of real estate to be conveyed to the use of a person then in being:—Held: the intermediate income of these two-thirds was not undisposed of by the will, but must be laid out in the purchase of real estate, according to the directions in the will, until such time as some person should be entitled to possession under the limitations declared by the will, so far at least as not to exceed the period allowed by law for accumulation.

(3) If a freehold estate be given by way of executory devise, there is no disposition of the property until that estate arises & becomes vested; &, consequently, in the meantime the freehold property descends to the heir-at-law (LORD WESTBURY, C.).—BECTIVE v. HODGSON (1864), 10 H. SUB-SECT. 2.—WHAT AMOUNTS TO GIFT OF RESIDUE.

5990. "What should be left."] — Testator reciting his intention to dispose of all his property, & that his daughter was likely to die [of a violent distemper], left his wife, if she did die, the revenue & dividends of such property ; but if his daughter lived, directed that his wife should only have her dower ; giving the residue & dividends to that daughter. If she died without children, testator gave his brother "all that should be left." The daughter survived testator, but died of the same illness without issue :—Held : the mother was still entitled for life ; & the words "what should be left," constituted a good residuary bequest to the brother.—DUHAMEL v. ARDOVIN (1751), 2 Ves. Sen. 162 ; 28 E. R. 105, L. C.

5991. "Whatever part of his estate should be unappropriated.]—Testator intending to dispose of all his personal estate, gives the residue in fifth shares ; but appoints his brother "heir to whatever part of his estate should be unappropriated by his will." One of the five shares lapsed in testator's lifetime :—Held : the above was an ultimate general residuary clause ; & comprised this, as including not merely what was not mentioned, but every thing not effectually given.—JACKSON v. KELLY (1751), 2 Ves. 5999. ——.]—Testator bequeathed to his wife "all my furniture, jewellery, pictures, wearing apparel, & other effects belonging to me at the time of my decease." The will went on to make specific bequests to his wife of money, shares, securities, etc. ; & it directed her to pay his debts, & it left it to her discretion whether she would provide for his son & daughters by a previous marriage & a nephew. It contained no bequests to any other person :—Held : the words "all other effects" constituted his wife residuary legatee.—In the Goods of JUPP, [1891] P. 300 ; 60 L. J. P. 92 ; 65 L. The codicil does not alter the nature of the bequest, but leaves the gift to the daughters still in the character of part of the residue.—DUKE v. HINXMAN (1833), 2 L. J. Ch. 185.

6003. ——.]—Where there is a gift of the residue of testator's estate, in case it shall not exceed a sum named, to two persons, & in case it shall exceed that sum, after deducting such sum, there is a direction that an addition shall be made to the legacies before given out of the surplus, that is a gift of residue & not a legacy.—WATT v. WOOD (1862), 2 Drew. & Sm. 56; 31 L. 6007. "Residue."]—Testator recites he has given to B. certain property; that he has along since agreed with T. as to disposition of his body; but leaves B. to decide, as also to decide as to his funeral. He then says, "I guess there will be found sufficient in my banker's hands to pay my debts, which I hereby desire B. to do, & keep the residue for her own use & pleasure":—Held: these latter words carried the general residue, & were not confined to the residue of the fund at banker's after payment of debts.—BOYS v. MORGAN (1838), 3 My. & Cr. 661; 2 Jur. 608; 40 E. 6012. "Share of provisions."]—Testatrix, after bequeathing certain property to her two daughters, & to her three sons, T., G., & J., gave the residue of her personal estate unto her two sons, T. & G., if both living at her decease, in equal shares, or, if either of them should be then dead, without leaving issue, wholly to the survivor of them; & if they should be then both dead, without leaving issue, then wholly to her son J.; or if he should be then dead, without leaving issue, leaving her said daughters, or either of them, then living, then to & amongst her said daughters, or the survivor of them, equally, or to an only surviving daughter. But, nevertheless, she directed that, if either of her daughters, or if any of her sons, should die, leaving issue, the issue of each of her daughters & sons so dying & leaving issue should take their, her or his parent's respective share of the provisions she had already made for her said daughters & sons respectively, equally, share & share alike, in case the parent or parents of such issue should not have otherwise appointed the same:—Held: testatrix, by the term "provisions," meant only the residue: the two sons, T. & G., having survived testatrix, were absolutely entitled to the residue.—YOUNG v. MARTIN (1843), 2 Y. & C. residuary bequest of " all other the rest & residue " of testator's personal estate.

The word " other " as used by testator does not restrict the ordinary effect of the gift as a gift of residue. Testator after enumerating several subjects as household furniture, etc., goes on & bequeaths all other the rest & residue of his personal estate. I am of opinion that these words standing alone would have constituted the widow complete residuary legatee (KNIGHT BRUCE, V.-C.).—MARTIN v. GLOVER (1844), 1 Coll. 269; 8 Jur. 640; 63 E. R. 414.

6014. Estate to be disposed of in a due course of administration.]—Testator having bequeathed to E. the dividends arising from two several funds or stock for her life, with remainder to her children, or if only one child, to that child absolutely, provides, " that if she shall die without leaving any such children or child, the principal sums or stock shall be considered as part of his personal estate & effects, & be disposed of in a due course of administration." Testator constituted E. his residuary legatee :—Held : under those last words, the next of kin of testator could not claim ; but in the event of E. dying without children or child, the fund in question formed part of testator's residuary estate, & passed to E., or her representatives, as such residuary legatee.—SCOTT v. MOORE (1844), 14 Sim. 35 ; 13 L. J. Ch. 283 ; 2 L. T. O. S. 474 ; 8 Jur. 281 ; 60 E. R. 269.

6015. Direction to trustees to consider whole real & personal estate.]—A person, on his marriage, entered into a covenant to settle all the real & personal estates which he might have at his death upon his wife for her life. No further trusts were declared. By his will he directed the trustees therein named to stand possessed of all his real & personal estates for the purposes of the settlement. By a codicil he directed his trustees to take the whole of his real & personal estate into their consideration ; & his will was to divide to every child its due share & proportion ; also taking into consideration any advances made to the children ; & he gave to one of his sons the option of purchasing his dwelling-house. By a second codicil he directed his trustees to convey another house to his daughters, they paying a proper consideration for it :—Held : there was not an intestacy as to the interest of testator after his wife's decease, but all his residuary real & personal estates were disposed of by his will.—HODGKINSON v. BARROW (1848), 2 Ph. 578 ; 17 L. 6016. " Other personal estate not hereinafter mentioned to be otherwise bequeathed."]—A bequest of " all my household goods & furniture, linen, china, glass, horses, carriages, & all my other personal estate not hereinafter mentioned to be otherwise bequeathed, & also all moneys in my banker s hands or in my houses, & also all moneys which shall be due & owing to me " :—Held : to be residuary, & not specific.—SARGENT v. ROBERTS (1848), 17 L. J. Ch. 117 ; 11 L. T. O. S. 170 ; 12 Jur. 429

6017. " All other real & personal estate of which he might die possessed."]—Testator by his will, in 1847, devised specific real estate to his daughter M., &, after making several specific bequests, devised & bequeathed all other real & personal estate of which he might die possessed to M. & others of his children. M. died in his lifetime :—Held : the devise expressed by the words " all other," etc., was a residuary devise within Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 25, & included the real estate devised to M.—COGSWELL v. ARMSTRONG (1855), 2 K. & J. 227 ; 1 Jur. 6018. " If I have omitted naming anything."]—Testatrix, after directing her debts & legacies to be paid, & a fund to be set apart to answer the several annuities given by her will, left whatever money remained, or whatever money she might be entitled to, or might have left her, to her two great nieces. She then gave various specific legacies, & concluded with these words : " If I have omitted naming anything, I leave it to my two sisters " :—Held : these last words did not constitute a general residuary bequest ; & the fund set apart to answer the annuities came within the term " money," & passed, under the first clause, to testatrix's great nieces.—BARRETT v. WHITE (1855), 24 L. J. Ch. 724 ; 1 Jur. N. S. 652 ; 3 W. R. 578.

" All other the hereditaments comprised in the settlement not hereinbefore disposed of."]—A married woman having a power of appointment under her marriage settlement over estates A. & B., appointed by will, in Sept. 1838, estate A. to her husband, in fee ; " & all other the hereditaments comprised in the settlement not hereinbefore disposed of " to another person. By codicils to her will she revoked the appointment of estate A. to her husband, & gave him the same estate for life, with remainder to trustees to sell & pay certain legacies, & pay the residue to charities :—Held : the devise of " all other the hereditaments," etc., by the will was not residuary, but specific.—Re BROWN'S TRUSTS (1855), 1 K. & J. 522 ; 3 W. disposal of all his property & effects by sale at auction, the proceeds of which he gave to his two nieces. Then, after giving two pecuniary legacies, he bequeathed the rest of his property in the 3 per cent. Gift in comprehensive terms.]—Under a will which contained no express gift of residue, but gave all furniture & the like, & all money in testator's house, or due to him, & "all my stocks, funds, & securities for money, money due on bonds, bills, notes, or other securities which I may die seised, possessed of, or entitled to, & of any kind & description whatsoever, my will & intention is that my exors. do & shall pay the same to H.":—Held: shares in banking & railway cos. passed; the words amounting, under the circumstances, to a complete residuary bequest.—Re DUTTON, HERBERT v. HARRISON (1869), 20 L. T. 239; 34 J. P. 552.

6027. "All other my personal estate."]—Testator bequeathed all his household goods & furniture, farming stock, money, goods, chattels, & effects, & all other his personal estate, to his wife absolutely, he then devised a freehold estate, called the Rye Crofts, for sale & payment of debts, & the surplus to his wife; & he devised another freehold estate to his wife absolutely; & other estates to his wife for life, with remainders over. The Rye Crofts estate was insufficient for payment of debts:—Held: the bequest of personalty to the wife was specific, & such bequest & the specifically devised real estates must contribute rateably to the payment of the surplus debts for which the Rye Crofts estate was insufficient.—POWELL v. RILEY (1871), L. R. 12 Eq. 175; 40 L. J. Ch. 533; 19 W. R. 869.

6028. "All my household goods, furniture, clothes, moneys, securities for money, whatsoever."]—Testatrix, after several small bequests, bequeathed "all my household goods, furniture, clothes, moneys, securities for money, whatsoever," to his sister:—Held: these words constituted a residuary bequest.—In the Goods of GARRETT (1872), 26 L. T. 984; 36 J. P. 615.

6029. Bequest of sums on same trusts as residuary bequest.]—Testatrix by a codicil, reciting that by her will she bequeathed her residuary personalty to her husband's family, but that a sum of £12,000 out of such residuary estate was derived from her husband, bequeathed it to his family in six shares of £2,000 each upon the same trusts as were declared of her residuary personalty & the income thereof:—Held: such sums of £2,000 were residuary bequests.—WEBB v. POLLOCK (1872), 20 W. R. 796.

6030. "All my money, cattle, farming implements, etc.," after payment of debts.]—Testator directed his freehold estate to be sold, & his debts to be paid by his widow, his sole extrix. He then bequeathed to her "all my money, cattle, farming implements, etc., she paying my brother J. the sum of ——, & my brother L. the sum of ——":—Held: the widow was entitled to the whole of testator's property after payment of his debts, & funeral & testamentary expenses.

I am of opinion that this testator has not died intestate as to any portion of his property, but has effectually given all his property to his wife. After directing his Berk House estate to be sold, he directs that his debts shall be paid by his wife. How is she to pay them? If she is to pay them out of his property then plainly she must take his property (JESSEL, M.R.).—CHAPMAN v. CHAPMAN (1876), 4 Ch. D. 800; 46 L. J. Ch. 104.
